"My whole attitude is that of the man who looks for the protection of the community against the wrongdoer, for the best possible public service, for the utmost conservatism consistent with the ends of justice, and for absolute avoidance of anything partaking of confiscation on the one hand, or of rashly undertaking the performance of a function for the performance of which the city is not yet qualified, on the other hand.

"Any discussion of these matters in the bulk must be fruitlessly misleading. We have to look at them in detail if we are not to be self-deceiving and guilty of the deceit of others. Taking the several phases of the question in detail, I therefore say, first, I am opposed to any further grants in perpetuity or practical perpetuity. This declaration may be regarded as supererogatory in view of provision of the present law. Starting from this plane, however, I should favor leases on short terms and subject at all times to termination by the city, conditioned upon adequate compensation, to be determined by judicial commission. The result of such a policy would leave the city in the way of being able at all times to reassume those rights which it shall hereafter temporarily grant to corporations on fair terms to both parties and for limited terms which would leave no room for corporate scheming or the creation of purely paper values.

Some Franchises Beyond Recall.

"As to the reassumption by the community of the franchises for surface and underground transportation that have already been parted with, I regard the discussion as purely academic in view of the poverty of our city Treasury and the state of our debt limit, and in view of the impossibility (without constitutional amendment for which we must appeal to the people of the whole State) of placing our city Treasury for many years to come in a position for reacquiring these franchises without the commission of the crime of confiscation, to which I am unalterably opposed.

"And, as constitutional, legal, and financial conditions reduce the proposition of immediate reacquisition of the railway franchises to that of a purely academical treatise, the identical conditions determine an identical result in respect of municipal operation. An effort is being made by some to delude a very large and well-meaning portion of the community into the belief that it is possible not only forthwith to accomplish municipal ownership of our city railways, but also their municipal operation.

"My message to my fellow-citizens is the message of sanity and of truth. Let yourselves be not deceived by the mere utopian, by the prophet of confiscation, or by the forerunner of Socialism. However great the reasons may be for the ultimate reassumption by the city of its railroad franchises, the question is of the future and not of the present, and with it goes the question of their operation. So much for the railways.

"We have, however, another class of public utilities exercised by corporations, performing functions which touch our lives and happiness even more closely and more directly than the function of transportation. I refer to the existing system of public lighting, the system which has recently been made the subject of legislative investigation, which investigation has resulted in one of the most lucid, most luminous and most convincing reports that has even been laid before the Legislature. I refer to the most praiseworthy work of Mr. Stevens's committee and of its learned counsel, Mr. Hughes.

"When the Charter Revision Commission was at work in 1900 a sub-committee of the Chamber of Commerce, consisting of Charles Stewart Smith, George Foster Peabody, and J. Kennedy Tod, issued a memorial of the commission as follows:

This committee believes that the city should own its water supply and that it should acquire, if it can be done on fair terms, the gas and electrical supplies of the city. The experience of municipal government in Great Britain abundantly proves that such ownership has tended to the public welfare.

"Now, their platform is my platform, this and none other, except that I would take it out of the realm of generality and reduce it to practice.

Means Operation, Too.

"The ownership here referred to looked not only to possession, but to operation of the lighting plants, in precisely the same way in which the city owns and operates, and most successfully and satisfactorily owns and operates, its water supply system, which is no greater necessity, under the conditions of modern life, than the system of artificial lighting. Here the question of operation is quite distinct from and very different to that of the operation of the railways. All over the world municipalities are actually operating gas and electric-lighting plants with the utmost benefit to the community.

"Year after year the corporations have grown more independent and more scornful of the law. Year after year they have robbed the community with the unconscionableness and the bravado of highwaymen imbued with a feeling of impunity begotten of the belief that money is the supreme power in the land. Year after year charters have lapsed, but the companies have continued to enjoy the franchises and the city has failed to enforce the terms of the law.

City Has Been Passive.

"Year after year the corporations have been guilty of violations of the law which have constituted causes of forfeiture, and the city has taken no steps to enforce the law or to put an end to the wrong. During the last two years, in particular, certain persons have felt, with regard to the City of New York as Blucher felt when he first came to London and said to Wellington: 'My God, what a city to sack!' Availing of the implications of certain provisions of the law with regard to consolidations, the precise terms of individual charters have been defied and overridden with gay hilarity and cynical irresponsibility.

"At last the entire lighting system has fallen into a single control. All competition has been strangled, a definite end has been put to all responsibility for the quality of the service, and the people lie prone at the feet of as dangerous and desperate a monopoly as history has a record of. It is absolute; it is complete; it is deaf; it is dumb; it is blind; it is greedy, and its is soulless, and, more and worse than all this, it is a rotten place in our body politic and a source of corruption too dreadful to contemplate without a shudder.

"There are now in the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx, (and I shall confine my discussion this evening to these two boroughs, although the condition in Brooklyn is no better and no less insistently demands attack)—there are now in Manhattan and the Bronx five companies which have been consolidated into one company in clear defiance of law, the New York Gas Light Company, which was incorporated in 1822; the Manhattan Gas Light Company, which was incorporated in 1830; the Metropolitan Gas Light Company, which was incorporated in 1848; the Harlem Gas Light Company, incorporated in 1855; the Municipal Gas Light Company, incorporated in 1874; the Knickerbocker Gas Light Company, incorporated in 1876, and the Consolidated Gas Company, which now owns all these others, incorporated in 1884.

"In addition to these there are the New York Mutual Gas Light Company, the Standard Gas Light Company, the New Amsterdam Gas Light Company, the Central Union Gas Company, and the Northern Union Gas Company, all of which are also controlled by the Consolidated Company.

The Consolidated an Example.

"To begin with and for purpose of illustration, let us therefore take the case of the Consolidated Gas Company of New York as owning the five companies first mentioned and without reference for the time being to any interest which it may have in the other companies. The value of the company's plant consists of:

Real estate and plant	$19,673,075
Mains and services	4,261,156
Material and supplies	697,014
Meters, stoves, &c	2,267,329
Contracts, rights, &c	7,781,000
Total	$35,079,576

"In the opinion of the Legislative Committee, as expressed in the report after the most admirable investigation conducted by Mr. Hughes, the plant is actually worth less, for the committee says:

We have no reason to believe that the company has underestimated their value, (the value of the several items of its assets,) and our conclusions, based upon the sworn statements of the officers of the company, is that the fair value of its gas-making plant, including whatever franchise it may own, does not exceed the sum of $30,000,000.

"Now, the Consolidated Company is equipped to render a practically complete service throughout the Borough of Manhattan, and its acquisition would be sufficient as a beginning to meet all immediate requirements of the people of the borough. According to the committee, its assets and its franchises are of no greater value than $30,000,000, and to acquire this business, I conceive that even in the present state of what is known as the debt limit the city is prepared to take over these properties. Certain questions have been raised and will be raised, however, in the matter of their valuation. Here I place myself upon the identical ground of the committee, from a report of which let me now quote:

Extortion Would Warrant More.

The fact that the company by rendering competition impossible has been able to earn large dividends, does not justify in adding to the value of its plant an additional amount for good will or earning capacity, and therefore justifying the continuance of excessive charges.

If this were permitted it would be able to secure in perpetuity the maintenance of exorbitant rates. Extortion for a series of years would be a sufficient excuse for further extortion. Indeed, there would be no escape from the conclusion that successful imposition on the public would warrant increased charges on the ground of increased good will.

The company is entitled to a fair return on its capital actually invested, but is not entitled to its grip on the public. The fact that it may be proper to value good will, due to efficient organization and the securing of public esteem through good service under ordinary conditions of competition furnishes no reason for an addition to capital in order to maintain high charges of an amount which, while termed good will, is really an estimate of earning capacity due to a monopolization of a public service.

Upon the facts disclosed by the evidence the Consolidated Gas Company cannot properly claim the right to add to value of its plant upon the score of franchises and rights, save as these may be deemed to represent actual property, to wit: rights in the streets duly acquired pursuant to law. But it is doubtful whether the Consolidated Gas Company has any extensive rights in the City of New York. It appears that no franchise, other than the franchise to be a corporation, has been granted to the Consolidated Gas Company, and it would seem that several of the grants to the constituent companies have expired, or will soon expire.

As an illustration of this the committee cites the fact that the grant to the New York Gas Light Company expired years ago, having been granted in 1833 for thirty years; also that of the Manhattan Company, which was granted in 1848 for twenty years, as well as that of the Metropolitan Company, which was granted in 1858 for thirty years.

Will Remedy the Wrong.

"Now I may say that if I am elected Mayor I will insist, with the aid of the courts and the formalities of justice, without evasion, subterfuge, or delay, in remedying the great wrong of permitting these companies to operate under franchises that have expired by their very terms.

"The case of the Harlem Gas Light Company is different, for its charter, granted in 1855, contains no limitation of time, but here the case is not difficult to an administration guided by honest purpose and determined to secure the city in its rights, for at that time the city reserved the right:

To purchase at any time from said company all materials, pipes, fixtures, buildings, and all and singular the real and personal property owned by said company by paying to the said company the cost of the same and 10 per cent. over the cost.

"Now, the rights of this company are very easily determinable. The committee reports to the Legislature:

It is the duty of the municipal officers to take proper steps to prevent an unauthorized encroachment, and the matter is now under consideration of the Corporation Counsel. Sufficient facts appear, however, to make it doubtful whether the Consolidated Gas Company has any rights in the streets of considerable value.

"What we should all be pleased to learn from Mayor McClellan is precisely why nothing has been heard from the Corporation Counsel and why he himself has done nothing, his attention having been called so emphatically to all these points as to constitute a glaring case of a deliberate omission of duty on his part. He has done nothing in the past and he makes no definite or distinct promise of what he will do in the future. Will he run away from it in his quest for a Gubernatorial nomination?

"Now I shall undertake to do nothing impossible or impracticable, but I shall promptly act upon the recommendation of the Assembly Committee and instruct the Corporation Counsel, if I be elected Mayor, to inaugurate his administration of his office by taking the steps necessary to put the people in possession of what belongs to them.

To Take Consolidated's Plants.

"I shall also instruct him, if the Legislature will empower me thereto, and will authorize the city to undertake the operation of the plants of the Consolidated Gas Company and condemn its properties under the right of eminent domain, to apply to the courts for the appointment of a commission for that purpose, and I shall then leave nothing undone to place the city at the earliest practicable moment in the position of operating these plants as it does its water plant, thereby giving to the people an honest service at lower prices and of better quality.

"A beginning will have to be made somewhere. I shall begin here and shall follow it up as rapidly as the City Treasury permits by similar action in the Bronx and in Kings.

"In course of time, however, gas will largely be superseded for lighting purposes by electricity. Bearing this in mind I shall with the utmost rapidity urge the completion of the municipal electric lighting power plant which has already been begun. Under the law and by the terms of the original contract the city is entitled promptly, upon the payment of the original cost and 10 per cent., to reassume possession of the electrical conduits and ducts. This can be done at an expense well within the capacity of the treasury, and the city will thus have, strictly in accordance with the law and with its rights, the machinery for supplying itself and also its citizens, in open competition with other companies, with electric light and power."

Mr. Ivins then said that the Consolidated Gas Company is a combination in restraint of trade. He said that by the consolidation the provisions of the original charters had been set aside and defeated, and continued:

"The Cruelest Monopoly."

"New York City is thus, in cynical defiance of law, in the grip of what is in reality the cruelest and, probably, the most irresponsible, monopoly in America save only the Standard Oil Company.

"I deal in no vague promises and in no generalities: I seek definite ends, and I have tried to make them clear to you. I have no sympathy for the principle of confiscation; I preach no gospel of Socialism, but I do preach the gospel of the law and of order, and I will enforce your rights rigidly and through strictly legal channels. If elected by the people I shall let nothing deter me from pursuing wrongdoers who contend for a prescriptive title based merely upon continuity in defiance of the rights of the people.

"Among the men of whom I should first and earliest ask advice are men like our present Chairman, Seth Low, than whose opinion none could be more valuable. Men like Dr. Albert Shaw, one of our greatest authorities as to the operation of municipal ownership in Europe, as well as in this country. Men like Oscar Straus, Carl Schurz, George Haven Putnam, Charles Stewart Smith, George L. Rives, George Foster Peabody, and so on, quite without distinction of politics, but principally I should seek the technical advice of the best operating experts in America.

"The official Cabinet, which will be made up of the heads of the great municipal departments, I may pledge you here would be each and every one of them men of commanding intelligence, character, and experience, and in their selection I should entirely disregard anything but their qualifications."

When ex-Mayor Low was presented by William Halpin as the Chairman of the meeting he was warmly received.

"You ought to be the next Mayor!" shouted an admirer. Mr. Low bowed his acknowledgment.

When the demonstration for him had subsided, Mr. Low spoke, in part, as follows:

Mr. Low's Three Reasons.

"There are three reasons which I wish to urge for the hearty support of the city ticket headed by Mr. Ivins. The first applies only to the people of New York County. I want to remind them that this is not the only county interested. If the impression goes abroad that the Republican city ticket is not to receive strong support, the struggle for good borough government in all the other boroughs will be by so much handicapped. In Brooklyn, in particular, there is a good chance of electing a model Borough President, Major Ebstein. Do not suffer such an atmosphere to be created here as to discourage our friends in Brooklyn and in the other boroughs, and so keep them, by pure disheartenment, from going to the polls.

"The next two reasons that I shall give I trust will appeal to every man in the city who is open to conviction. Suppose that in this election the officers and Directors of the great life insurance companies now under investigation were about to be chosen by popular votes. Is there any man here who supposes that the people would knowingly vote to fill any position in those companies by a person whose conception of the duties of such a position was that he could satisfactorily discharge his trust while using his position for the personal advantage of himself or his friends? In the presence of the life insurance investigation is it not evident that the whole idea of trusteeship in many cases has been in this way smirched, if not altogether lost? And has it not given way too often to the faults and demoralizing opinion that a corporation officer or Director is simply a man who has 'the inside track,' so that he can properly take advantage, for his own benefit, of the opportunities for personal gain which come to him as a trustee? Yet this is precisely the Tammany conception of government.

A System of Corruption.

"Our candidate, Mr. Ivins, has well called this 'the cruelest system of organized corruption in this country.' Why should any man be willing to place in control of the city's interests such men as he would drive out of the control of the life insurance companies, if he could, with a whip of scorpions?

"Mr. Croker stated the theory explicitly when he said that he was in politics 'for his own pocket all the time.' The history of Tammany has written the same thing large so often that only the willfully blind can refuse to see it. The Mayor said last night that his administration has been 'honest, efficient, and economical.'

"What I would say of Mayor McClellan's claim that his administration has been honest, economical, and efficient is that Mr. McClellan uses words inaccurately. [Laughter.] In any proper sense of the words Mayor McClellan's administration cannot be said to be honest, efficient, and economical.

"I hold it to the lasting honor of Mr. Ivins that, both as Democrat and Republican, he is the sworn foe of that miserable standard of honesty, efficiency, and economy in public Government which Tammany Hall offers."

Militant Republicans Again.

Attorney General Julius M. Mayer said ten days ago the Republicans were in doubt and difficulty, but that now they were the militant Republicans of old. Referring to the nomination of Patrick F. McGowan on the Tammany ticket for President of the Board of Aldermen and the possibility that Mr. McGowan would succeed Mr. McClellan as Mayor at the end of the year, Mr. Mayer asked:

"Why McGowan? Who's McGowan? Who knows him?"

"Murphy does," was the quick retort of a man in the gallery.

"I want that bright man on my staff through this campaign," said Mr. Mayer. "That is the explanation of Mr. McGowan's nomination—Murphy knows him."

Mr. Mayer then reviewed the career of Mr. Ivins, especially his achievements as an opponent of Tammany Hall administrations and political practices.

James L. Wells, Republican candidate for President of the Board of Aldermen, followed Mr. Mayer.

The meeting was brought to a close by addresses from Congressman J. Van Vechten Olcott and Walter N. Chandler.

Walter H. Chandler said: "Croker tried the trick of respectability in nominating Shepard. And Murphy followed in his footsteps when he nominated McClellan. Tweed died in prison; Croker lives in exile; and the shadow of the curse will yet fall on Murphy." The speaker declared that McAvoy, and not McAdoo, is the real head of the police.

RESPECTS HIM "IN ONE WAY."

A Jerome Sentence of Which the Stenographer Left Out Part.

Much comment was heard yesterday on a sentence in the stenographic report of Mr. Jerome's speech at the Murray Hill Lyceum. As reproduced in the newspapers from the notes of one of the stenographers of the Jerome Campaign Committee, three words, "in one way," were left out, completely changing its meaning. This is what Mr. Jerome actually said:

"In this whole land there is not one man this day, bitter as my words against him may seem, that I have more respect for—in one way—than Charlie Murphy."

Mr. Jerome laid special stress on the three words which the stenographer dropped out of the report.

Harlem Has a Jerome Club.

The Camp Jerome Club of Harlem was organized last night. Alexander A. Maydee was elected President, Leo Sulzberger Treasurer, and Samuel Blumberg Secretary.

M'CLELLAN STIRS UP BROOKLYN DEMOCRATS

ASKS REPEAL OF BURR ACT

So the Borough Can Get Water from Suffolk County—Swanstrom Presides at One Meeting.

Mayor McClellan made a whirlwind tour of Brooklyn last night, addressing five meetings. He covered twenty-five miles in an automobile, and spoke to about 15,000 persons. At all the meetings his reception was enthusiastic. The only unpleasantness of the evening was when an enthusiast at Schwaben Hall pounded the Mayor so hard on the back that his hat was knocked off.

At each meeting the Mayor spoke of the injustice done Brooklyn by the Legislature in prohibiting the city from entering Suffolk County to get water. He asked the voters to demand a pledge of their candidates for the Assembly to vote to repeal the Burr act which proscribes Suffolk County watersheds. Herman A. Metz, Patrick F. McGowan, James W. Ridgway, candidate for Borough President; Controller Edward M. Grout, J. Edward Swanstrom, James D. Bell, and Luke D. Stapleton also spoke at the meetings.

Soon after 7 o'clock the Mayor left his Washington Square residence in his motor car, accompanied by Mr. McGowan, Senator McCarren, John H. O'Brien, his campaign manager, and William G. Foster. The first meeting was in Prospect Hall, in Seventeenth Street, near Fifth Avenue, in the Park Slope section. Isaac M. Kapper presided. There was a big demonstration as the Mayor entered.

"Two years ago," he began, "when I spoke in this hall as a candidate for the Mayoralty I had to appeal to you to believe in me on my honor; now I come to ask you to bear witness that, with due allowance for human imperfection, I have done my duty and kept my word to the borough. Then I was a comparative stranger to you, but to-day I appear with that confidence which is engendered by the thought of the trust you reposed in me two years ago.

"This Borough of Brooklyn is so situated that in a short time it is bound to be the most populous of all the boroughs, greater than all the others combined. We have tried to heed its needs, and in the two years of my administration you have received 33 1-3 per cent. of the moneys appropriated for permanent improvements while you have paid in but 18 per cent. of the taxes. Not that you have received more than you are entitled to, but an intelligent heed of the future demanded it, and in ten years the city will reap a thousandfold profit from the investment."

The second meeting was in Saengerbund Hall, Smith and Schermerhorn Streets. J. Edward Swanstrom, who was Borough President under Mayor Low, and a Fusionist two years ago, presided.

"Under Mr. Swanstrom's wise administration in this borough," said the Mayor, "a total of 102 miles of streets were asphalted. We had to follow his excellent example and tried to go him one better, with the result that we have paved 145 miles at a reduced cost of 28 cents per square yard in the borough."

At the third meeting, in Congress Hall, at Atlantic Avenue and Vermont Street, East New York, the Mayor covered much the same ground as before, and spoke of the debt limit of the city as being an effective check to any wholesale experiments in municipal ownership line. Rudolph Reimer, Jr., presided at this meeting.

The fourth meeting was in Schwaben Hall, at Knickerbocker and Myrtle Avenues, Williamsburg. There Otto Kempner, another convert from the Fusion cause, presided. The Mayor said the city was within $40,000,000 of the debt limit and called attention to the fact that enormous expenditures were still demanded for new schools, bridges, playgrounds, parks, docks, and other improvements.

"In the municipalization of public utilities," he said, "the administration has taken advanced but conservative ground. Private rights, however, have been respected scrupulously and, if I am re-elected Mayor I shall follow similar lines in the municipalization of public utilities in the future, for I am convinced they are sound, and, in the long run, will best serve the interests of this conservative community."

At the last meeting, in McCaddin Memorial Hall, in Berry Street, Williamsburg, was the biggest crowd of the night. Police Inspector Adam Cross, who acted as the Mayor's escort, had difficulty in getting the candidate and his party in and out of the hall. Edward Reigelman presided at the meeting.

After reviewing the issues of the campaign the Mayor asked the voters to support him if they believed he had tried honestly to give them a good, honest, and clean administration.

"If you do not believe I have done so," he said, "I shall, as a loyal citizen, have no word of protest to say after election day."

The Mayor's automobile, followed by the convoy of four other touring cars containing the reporters, returned to Manhattan by the Williamsburg Bridge. Alexander Greismer, head of the speakers' bureau at the Kings County headquarters, was in charge of all the arrangements.

RONNER FOR McCLELLAN.

Hasn't Bolted—Goes to See Murphy to Tell Him So.

Register John H. J. Ronner, with a delegation of his followers in the Bronx, called at Tammany Hall yesterday to see Charles F. Murphy and deny a published statement that Ronner and his followers were opposed to McClellan and had bolted the ticket. The Register expressed indignation to Mr. Murphy, and assured him there was no foundation for the report.

"You can say for me," declared Mr. Ronner afterward, "that I and my friends are for McClellan and for the whole Democratic ticket. Any other statement of our position is maliciously untrue."

POOR JOHNNY AHEARN, SAYS JEROME, REPLYING

in between the lines, but don't I know what it means to have those fellows put the gaff to you? Have I lived in this town for all these years and not known it? [Applause.] Freedom? Freedom nothing! 'Go to the front and do it!' 'But it isn't true.' 'Go to the front and do it!' And the man, with dishonor and sorrow in his heart, goes to the front and does it. Then he comes to you and says: 'Oh, my God, I had to do it. I couldn't help it.' Ahearn came to me in good faith, with his heart full of friendship, and believing the greatest thing in the world he could do for any man was to get him on the Tammany Hall ticket. He came to me months ago and said: 'Judge, if they gave you the nomination, would you reject it?'

"'Why,' I said, 'Ahearn, any body of citizens whose nomination I could accept with honor I will accept.' And that is all there is to it. [Prolonged applause.] And as for my discussing and making it a condition that McClellan should or should not be on the ticket, the absolute absurdity of that on its face requires no contradiction or refutation."

Mr. Jerome here repeated the apology he offered to Mayor McClellan at the meeting at Murray Hill Lyceum Thursday night before he went on:

Poor Johnny Ahearn.

"To that extent Ahearn is perfectly truthful. It is not so much in what he says as it is in the things that he does not say. [Laughter and applause.] Well, poor Johnny Ahearn, getting on the platform last night and saying, 'I have always been friendly to Mr. Jerome'; getting up there and trying at the same time to be loyal to his friendship for me and to the cruel hand that drove him to it—poor Johnny Ahearn, twisting and turning; not lying exactly, but suppressing, finally develops a second interview with me. He lunched with me. [Laughter.]

"Aha! Oh, how my opponent, poor Jim Osborne, would dwell on that before a jury—'Gentlemen, he even lunched with him!' Well, he did lunch with me. But he says that he got a 'phone. So did I. And there was a third gentleman present, who got us together at the suggestion of a Judge, who suggested that Johnny Ahearn was very anxious to see me. Well, there wasn't any reason why I should not see him. So we went to lunch.

"And the interview reads along: 'I said to him: "If you are a candidate for District Attorney, why don't you go and see Mr. Murphy?"'

"Shades of the lamented Devery! Devery, with the wisdom that experience had taught him, said to an errant copper one day: 'When you are caught with the goods on you don't say nothin'.' [Applause.] And here is the proof. Murphy says, 'If Jerome denies it I will bring out the proof.' And he brings out the proof on the stage of Tammany Hall, and this is his proof: 'If you are a candidate for District Attorney by Tammany Hall why don't you go and see Mr. Murphy?'

"Now, what actually happened was this—that Ahearn coming with friendship in his heart—as the little fellow feels, and I don't want to say a mean word about him, because many a year will roll by before he will forget his effort to strike me a blow. And I do not want to say anything that will make his life harder. But this ruthless hand from Good Ground has reached out, and just as poor Armitage Mathews was driven by another gang of political outcasts, so a brave little fellow has been driven to take the platform and strike his friend, or try to. And that is political freedom in the City of New York among American citizens! My heavens!

"Look at what Murphy says. He says that he replied to me—forsooth, I should be chasing him! And why wouldn't I? Well, I suppose I ought to be. [Laughter and applause.] I had declared explicitly, on the 1st of August, that I would have none of your bosses, one side or another, but the people for mine, first, last, and all the time. [Great applause.]

The Tammany Convention.

"And in the face of that I was accused—funny thing that—I was accused of not only sending a confidential man, but of stooping to his liveried chauffeurs, and the Sage of Good Ground comes forward and says, 'No, he would not see Mr. Jerome; would not receive him.' There was no reason for him to see me, as his case (mind you, that is my case) was in the hands of the convention. In the hands of the convention? Why, he knows that he is a lia— Hush! He knows he is not telling the truth. He knows that up to 8 o'clock and after that convention was sitting there, waiting for the bosses downstairs to turn up—not the district leaders, mind you, oh, no!

"One Charles F. Murphy and several other gentlemen of importance, but nobody that you appointed to represent you. They waited down stairs, making up this thing, and it was this fame and fortune—and there was some talk about their trying to get an old friend of mine, John W. Goff, at one moment, and James Osborne at one moment—backing and filling. And meanwhile the convention waited—the convention of which Murphy says that my fate was in their hands. Murphy's convention waited until finally a slip of paper—and this is the absolute truth, and I mean what I tell you, that the very committee that was to take it up stairs didn't know who it was until they got the slip of paper handed to them, and they walked upstairs into the convention and—hurrah!—they are off in the stretch. [Applause.] And that is the Democracy! Not my kind!

"To be ruled by Good Ground—for these fellows to get the name handed to them on a piece of paper from J. Sergeant Cram or somebody, and then like the liveried chauffeurs at Good Ground, for the committee every moment to stand: 'Yes, Mr. Murphy, thank you, Sir, yes.' [Laughter and applause.] Take it up stairs into that old hall where real men once sat. Take it up into that hall where this fellow from Good Ground rattles around like a pea in a pod. And for him to say that he sent word to me that my fate was in the hands of the convention! 'I thank you, Sir, yes!' Pah! But it would be funny if it did not mean the impairment of your liberties and mine.

"It seems to me I have discounted this thing to-night, and I am not going to be sidetracked unless the boss will talk. Every day he will talk I will talk back."

The meeting was by far the noisiest and most demonstrative so far addressed by Mr. Jerome. Arthur Von Briesen presided. Gen. John E. Eustis and John Brooks Leavitt spoke before Mr. Jerome arrived. Mrs. Jerome was present all the evening, occupying a box.

Charles F. Murphy declared yesterday that he regarded the statement made by John F. Ahearn on the Tammany platform the night before as sufficient proof that District Attorney Jerome had made advances to Tammany in the hope that he would be nominated on the organization ticket.

"The charge can be backed up with additional proof if Mr. Ahearn's statement is not sufficient," said Mr. Murphy, "but it ought to be sufficient, and I so regard it. I don't consider it necessary to produce any further proof; not now, at least."

As to the public statement made by James W. Osborne that Jerome had emissaries at Tammany Hall right up to the minute Osborne was nominated, Mr. Murphy said:

"That statement was correct. Right up to the meeting of the Executive Committee before the convention met there was an emissary of Mr. Jerome on deck watching proceedings."

But he couldn't tell who the emissary was. Somebody thought he had seen Assistant District Attorney Townsend in Fourteenth Street while the Tammany convention was on.

Jerome's Meetings Next Week.

Mr. Jerome's campaign committee has arranged that he shall address these meetings next week:

Monday—49 Henry Street, Amsterdam Hall at Forty-fourth Street and Ninth Avenue, Majestic Hall at 125 East 125th Street.

CAN AN ENROLLED MAN BE AN INDEPENDENT?

100 Protests Asking This Against Hearst Ticket.

MANY REPUBLICANS AFFECTED

They Have Signed Hearst and Jerome Petitions After Enrolling to Nominate Party Candidates.

Something like 100 protests, covering altogether thirty-nine cases, will be heard this morning by the Board of Elections against the Hearst ticket. John R. Voorhis, President of the board, worked all night last night to get the cases ready for the hearings, which will start at 9:30 this morning.

The protests come from all the five boroughs, and are directed mainly against the New York County ticket and the whole municipal ticket of the Municipal Ownership League, the borough tickets in Manhattan, the Bronx, Brooklyn, and Queens, and some important cases covering the Jeffersonian Democracy in Queens County. That is the municipal ownership party of that county, and it has nominated Justice Joseph A. Burr, a Republican, for Supreme Court Justice of the Second Department.

As soon as decisions are given by the Board of Elections the cases will be taken to the Supreme Court. Prompt action is necessary, as the last day to bring the cases into court is Monday.

Secretary Thomas F. Smith of Tammany Hall denied without reservation last night that Tammany, as an organization, was making them.

In Brooklyn Senator McCarren is opposing the placing of Bird S. Coler's name on the official ballot as the nominee of the Hearst party for President of the Borough. Although it was not learned last night that any protests had been made against the placing of District Attorney Jerome's name on the ballot, it is understood that Tammany men will take similar action in Mr. Jerome's case should the protests against Mr. Hearst be successful.

The Hearst and Coler petitions contain more than 2,000 names, as required by law, but the point raised is that most of the persons who have signed the petitions are not "independents," as contemplated by the election law, but are enrolled Republicans or Democrats or Socialists who have already participated in nominating candidates and cannot take part in another nomination.

The precise point made is that an independent certificate of nomination can be made only by independents. It is admitted that if this point is sustained it will have a far-reaching effect not only on the present local situation, but on all future elections. Mr. Jerome's petition is signed by such well-known enrolled Republicans as Charles E. Hughes, who is conducting the insurance investigation; ex-Judge Olcott, and Job Hedges. The various Municipal Ownership petitions in the different boroughs are also signed by admittedly enrolled Republicans and Democrats.

The protestants declare that a man cannot participate in any other nomination than that of the party with which he has chosen to enroll. The certificate which he signs to enroll as a party man says:

I, ———, who have placed a mark underneath the party emblem of my choice, do solemnly declare that I have this day registered as a voter for the next ensuing election, ———; that I am in general sympathy with the principles of the party which I have designated by my mark; that it is my intention to support generally at the next general election the nominees of such party for State or National offices, and that I have not enrolled with or participated in any primary election or convention of any other party since the first day of January last.

The independent certificate says:

We, the undersigned duly qualified electors for which the nomination for public offices is hereby made, under the provision of Section 57 of the election law, do hereby declare that it is our intention to support at the polls the candidacy of the person or persons herein nominated for public office.

Subdivision 6 of Article III. of the primary election law says:

No elector shall be permitted to take part in any primary election of any party other than the party with which and in the district in which he is enrolled.

It will be set up that the law recognizes only two classes of voters—party men and independents, and that the policy of the law is to prevent a man walking out of the convention after participating in it, and then classifying himself as an independent and signing a certificate which makes him participate in the choice of two candidates for the same office.

Attorney General Mayer said last night: "You will notice that the party certificate declares the intention of the person signing it 'to support the nominees of such party for State or National offices.' Nothing is said about municipal or county or borough offices, and I should say that this disposes of the matter. I want it understood that this is my opinion given without looking into the matter very deeply, but so far as I can judge now the protests do not seem to be good on the ground of previous enrollment."

One of the most determined fights will be waged by the Democrats of Kings and Queens against the placing on the Municipal Ownership ticket of the name of Justice Burr. In this case an entirely different set of points will be raised. It is declared that not only are the signers of Justice Burr's petition enrolled Republicans, but that the petition of the Jeffersonian Democracy in Queens, on which Justice Burr is also a candidate, bears the names of well-known Kings Republicans. Some of these names are ex-Assemblyman James D. Remsen, D. Harry Ralston, Dady's right-hand man; Walter S. Brewer, Benjamin F. Childs, secretary to County Judge Aspinall; Assemblyman Edward C. Dowling, Alderman Wirth, Naval Officer Sharkey, and many others.

FLAMMER READY TO QUIT.

If It Will Help Ivins—Accuses Jerome of Treachery.

Ex-Magistrate Charles A. Flammer, Republican nominee for District Attorney, did not speak at Carnegie Hall with Mr. Ivins and the other prize orators last night. He spoke in Empire Hall, in 116th Street, near Eighth Avenue. Some 700 persons were there to hear him.

Mr. Flammer told his audience that he must be forgiven for any shortcoming in the matter of speechmaking because he had been out of practice in that line for a long time. He had no apology to make for accepting the nomination, he said. He called the nomination a great honor, and continued:

"I must refer to Mr. Jerome, one of my opposing candidates for District Attorney. Mr. Jerome was offered the Republican and Fusion nomination if he would make a fight against Tammany, but he declined. That was a mystery to me for a time, but it was solved yesterday by Murphy's statement. He made the Fusion fight four years ago and two years ago, and it was only reasonable that he should be asked to make it again.

"He should have accepted for the sake of gratitude at least. I don't know just when he was made an Assistant District Attorney, but I am told that it was done at the request of Richard Croker.

"He was made a Justice of the Court of Special Sessions by Mayor Strong, and Fusion forces made him District Attorney.

"Now these forces have turned him down. Ingratitude is a crime, and it is only a step to treachery.

"I speak of these things to put the Republican organization straight with Mr. Jerome.

"I am ready to give up my nomination if I can help Mr. Ivins to be elected Mayor. This nomination was not sought by me. My name was not mentioned until it had been determined to turn Mr. Jerome down."

Mr. Flammer then devoted half an hour to reading from newspaper clippings, quoting James W. Osborne's opinion of Mr. Jerome. At the conclusion he said:

"Mr. Osborne ought to know what he is talking about. He was Mr. Jerome's first and able assistant, and when I read his condemnation of Mr. Jerome I am also reading his self-condemnation."

William M. Ivins, the Republican candidate for Mayor, arrived at the hall at 11:55 o'clock, and spoke for ten minutes. He asked his audience to be gentle with him because he was tired and because he had just attended "the most splendid meeting in the history of municipal campaigning."

"I did not come here to talk," continued Mr. Ivins, "but just to put myself in evidence, because I shall talk to you again. I feel assured of election in view of the present political conditions in this city. I pledge myself to serve four years as Mayor if I am elected. No political ambition will deter me from the performance of my duty. I should like to find out from Mr. McClellan whether he will say as much.

"If he is elected and runs for Governor next year that will be the beginning of a new fight between us, for I will be at his heels in every county in the State, and will send him back to the City Hall in spite of himself.

"I shall abandon every business enterprise that I am interested in if I am elected, and I should like to find out from Mr. Hearst if he is willing to do the same."

Other speakers were Assemblyman William Young, who is a candidate for re-election; Dr. H. A. C. Anderson, candidate for Register; Pratt A. Brown, Vice President of the Republican Club, and James L. Wells, candidate for President of the Board of Aldermen, who was introduced as John L. Wells.

HARDMAN
Autotone Piano
A Musical and Mechanical Marvel.

This astonishing invention is the most perfect combination in one instrument of a world-known piano—the "Hardman"—and a superb Piano-Player—also the "Hardman." It is a Hardman Piano of the usual appearance and size, which can be played by hand; by touching a slide, anyone—no musical knowledge required—can play it by means of a perforated music-roll. Such an instrument brings the concert room into the home and gives pleasure to every member of the family.

THE AUTOTONE PIANO.
When used for hand-playing the pedals and music-roll disappear, being concealed inside the case.

The Hardman Piano-Player has also been built inside of the Harrington Piano, (which we control,) one of the sweetest and most durable toned pianos made.

Whatever your circumstances, our system of easy payments makes it possible for you to buy an Autotone Piano. Wherever you live, we will deliver the instrument free of charge. We will take your old Piano or Piano-Player at a liberal sum. Let us estimate on an exchange.

Our latest designs of Hardman Uprights, as well as Small, Baby and Parlor Grands, are the finest ever brought to our warerooms. The Hardman Piano-Player in its portable shape, which can be attached to any make of piano, together with the Hardman and Harrington Autotone pianos, comprise one of the most artistic assortments of Automatic instruments ever placed on sale in any one establishment.

Shirts that just strike the fancy of men.

OUR MEN'S FURNISHING SECTION has attained such a degree of popularity that the values we are continually offering are taken up in less than half the time of a year ago. Men know the store better—that's the reason. We have 1,560 Men's Fine Shirts, equal to qualities sold elsewhere as high as 1.50, on sale here to-day at 69c.

There are ups and downs in every business. A Troy manufacturer who supplies exclusive shops throughout the country had an order for 130 dozen Men's Fine Shirts, to be delivered a month ago, but by some misunderstanding the fabric he had ordered for these shirts never reached the factory until about ten days ago, and by that time the order had been cancelled. Of course, the cloth mill is the loser in this case. The manufacturer must keep his shelves clear, and our offer to take the whole lot as soon as it could be finished brought such a concession that we can place 1.50 shirts on sale as a special for to-day at..... 69c

We've had them made plain and plaited negligee and semi-negligee styles, with detached or attached cuffs. The fabrics are the very best woven and printed madras and zephyr cloths in all the neat patterns, comprising the new up-to-date colorings—also light and dark effects. Finished absolutely perfect in fit and workmanship. Sizes 14 to 17. Not a shirt in the lot can be duplicated for 1.00—most all worth 1.50. We don't expect 130 dozen to be enough for to-day's sale at..... 69c

BEDFORD TERRORIZED BY A YOUNG FIREBUG

Six Fires in Three Weeks Within a Radius of a Mile.

CITIZENS PATROL AT NIGHT

Folks Afraid to Go to Sleep for Fear They'll Be Burned—The Suspect Well-to-Do.

Six incendiary fires in three weeks within a radius of a mile have caused such a panic among the inhabitants of the village of Bedford, Westchester County, that they are afraid to sleep at nights for fear of being burned.

The fires are believed to be the work of one man, the scion of a well-to-do family in the neighborhood, who is weak minded, and has a mania, like the Roman Emperor Nero, for seeing things burn. Pinkerton detectives aided by the village constable have been watching him for the last few days, but no direct evidence has been obtained.

Deputy Sheriffs, detectives, and watchmen armed with guns patrolled the lanes last night and held up all persons who happened to be abroad, and put them through an examination as to their business. The total damage caused by the fires is estimated at $24,000.

The first fire occurred on Sept. 26 at 3 A. M., when Mrs. G. Evans Browne's store, next door to the historic old Court House, was burned to the ground. The Court House was damaged by the fire. On the following day at 11 P. M. the stables belonging to the H. Marquand estate were destroyed.

Then there was a lull until Oct. 10, when the parsonage of the Presbyterian Church was set afire in three places in the basement at 5:45 o'clock in the morning, when the Rev. Frederick Van Hoersen, the rector, and his wife and children were asleep. They were rescued in a half-suffocated condition.

Fortunately the fire was discovered in time and got under control befort it had made serious headway. The same morning George Wood's barn was set on fire shortly before noon and burned to the ground. The horses and carriages were saved.

These fires, which from the traces of oil-soaked rags and other inflammable materials left behind, were evidently incendiary, caused so much uneasiness among the villagers that Supervisor Isaac Turner called a meeting of the Village Board, and it was decided to offer a reward of $250 for the firebug.

Nothing happened until last Monday evening, when the barn and outhouses belonging to Miss Mary Woodcock were completely destroyed by fire at 7:30 in the evening. A pedigree bull perished in the barn. At 11 o'clock the same evening two haystacks belonging to Mr. Millmore were set on fire. This caused such a scare that the villagers were afraid to go to bed that night.

The climax came the next night, when the barn and outhouses belonging to R. P. Lounsbery were found to be on fire at 11 o'clock. The loss on this fire was more than $8,000.

Supervisor Turner called another meeting of the village board on Wednesday and the reward was increased to $500. The aid of the Pinkertons was called in to solve the mystery, and several of the young men of the village were enrolled as vigilantes to patrol the roads at night.

The suspected firebug has been present at every fire and has done more shouting than any one else in the village. The two haystacks burned late on Monday night, were about half a mile from the village, and he would have had to pass them on his way home from the fire at Miss Woodcock's.

Last night the vigilantes were divided into two watches, each composed of six men and a Captain. Dr. Coopernail had charge of one watch and John Kinkle, the Constable, commanded the other.

The four Pinkerton men who came from New York and their chief worked alone.

A tramp known as "Yellow," who was alleged to have been seen around Mr. Wood's barn before it caught fire on Oct. 10, was arrested at Bedford Station yesterday afternoon. Mr. Lounsbury sent Rose McCann, his cook, who said she had seen the firebug at the Station, but she failed to identify him and he was released

Mr. Lounsbery, who is a banker at 15 Broad Street, said last night:

"I believe there are three persons in the village who are mixed up in this incendiary business, and one or two others know all about it. The police have no evidence sufficient to make an arrest, and I am afraid there is not much chance of catching the culprits."

The firebug suspect is described as a young man about 25 years old, who has acquired fame for wearing riding breeches, drinking whisky, and skillfully evading work. His family came to Bedford about eighteen months ago and purchased a handsome residence.

Justice Frederick Clark was asked to sign a warrant for the arrest of the suspect yesterday afternoon, but refused on account of the lack of evidence.

Bedford Village is one of the oldest places in New York State, and is a part of Bedford Township, which is composed of Bedford Station, Katona, Mount Kisco, and Bedford Village.

The Court House, which had such a narrow escape from destruction, was erected just after the Revolution to replace the one burned by Tarleton's raiders.

McCLELLAN-MURPHY CONFAB.

About Jerome Attacks?—The Mayor's Plans for To-day.

Mayor McClellan and Charles F. Murphy held a long conference at the Mayor's headquarters in the Bartholdi Hotel last evening before the Mayor made his whirlwind campaign of Brooklyn. Neither had any comment to make on the matters under discussion.

In the afternon the Mayor received ex-Sheriff William F. Grell and the Executive Committee of the German Democracy, which has declared itself for McClellan. The organization polled 12,000 votes for Grell as an independent candidate for Sheriff two years ago.

This afternoon the Mayor will visit Fire Headquarters, and present honor medals to the firemen. In the evening he will make no platform speeches, but will be at the Manhattan Club at the dinner given by Herman Ridder. The other candidates on the city ticket, Herman A. Metz and Patrick F. McGowan, will also be at the dinner.

HEARST GETS McCARREN MAN.

Henry S. Cochrane Said to Have Gone Over to Him.

William R. Hearst spent the greater part of yesterday preparing his letter of acceptance which, according to announcement made at his headquarters in the Hoffman House, he will make public to-day.

Meanwhile his managers received additional encouragement from Brooklyn. They heard that through the instrumentality of ex-Controller Bird S. Coler, who is running for Borough President of Brooklyn, on the Municipal Ownership ticket, that Henry S. Cochrane, leader of the McCarren forces in the Seventeenth Assembly District in that borough, had been won over to Hearst.

William C. De Witt of Brooklyn, who was a Republican member of the Greater New York Charter Commission, yesterday sent word to the Hearst headquarters that he was out for municipal ownership and would support the ticket headed by Mr. Hearst.

It was announced at the Hoffman House headquarters yesterday that eighty members of the Cherokee Club, the regular Tammany organization of the Twenty-eighth Assembly District, of which Dock Commissioner Maurice Featherson is leader, had bolted a meeting held at the club last night and had signified their intention to organize a Hearst club.

William Grant Brown, President of the Independent Republican Club, organized a few days ago to support Hearst, will open the Republican Hearst campaign to-night with a speech at Lion Palace, where Mr. Hearst and the principal candidates on the Hearst ticket will also speak.

Marcus Mayer yesterday organized a Hearst Club. Headquarters was established at 116 West Twenty-second Street. Membership will include theatrical people, actors, hotel men, and habitués of the Rialto. The Hearst managers are trying to make political capital among the hotel people out of the recent raids made by the police on up-town hotels.

The Hearst managers took the first steps yesterday to organize a huge Vigilance Committee to serve as watchers at the polling places on election day. A "Committee of Six Thousand" will be organized on a military basis under the command of Capt. Harry A. Ely, commander of the Spanish War Veterans in this city. Capt. Ely will open a recruiting office on Monday.

What is left of the Greater New York Democracy has indorsed Hearst and Municipal Ownership.

The retail fish dealers have declared for Hearst because McClellan decided in favor of the wholesale men in a dispute concerning privileges in Fulton Market.

SAYS MURPHY TRIED A BRIBE.

Hearst Chairman Says $500 Was Offered to Him to Stay Away.

It had been announced that W. R. Hearst would make a tour of the east side last night, and on the strength of that announcement two halls, the Maennerchor in East Fifty-sixth Street and the New Arlington in St. Mark's Place, were crowded to the doors with audiences eager to listen. Mr. Hearst, however, was busy with his letter of acceptance, and did not arrive until very late.

Senator Ford, who is running for Controller, and J. G. Phelps Stokes, the young candidate for President of the Board of Aldermen, with Clarence J. Shearn, candidate for District Attorney on the Hearst ticket, and John De Witt Warner, supplied all the oratory there was, but the audience at the New Arlington Hall was startled by Edward Schott, a former Tammany worker who acted as Chairman. He declared that Charles F. Murphy, the Tammany leader, had tried to bribe him into declining to preside with an offer of $500. The audience howled with indignation when the announcement was made.

Early in the evening word was sent to Mr. Hearst telling him that Arlington Hall was packed with people who were clamoring to see him and begging him to come, if only for a minute. He received the message when he reached home at 10 o'clock, and went to the hall, where he was uproariously welcomed. The speech he made was short. In it he said:

"We have now to deal with the disreputable tactics of the Murphy machine. We were required to get 2,000 names on our petition. We got 35,000 before we could get the petitions back. The Murphy machine now, angered at our success, comes back at us and says that there are some fictitious names among thos 35,000 names. I want to say that if there are any fictitious names there the Murphy machine put them there. [Applause.]

"But we are nat through with the Murphy machine. We learn that there has been a great deal of illegal registration in Mr. Murphy's district. We want to look at his registration list. We are going to the courts to-morrow and get a mandatory writ allowing us to see them and examine them. Then again we are going to post a reward offering $1,000 for the arrest and conviction of the first illegal voter who attempts to vote. All the machines are geeting together to try to beat us. But we are going to beat them."

GIRL CASHIER'S CONFESSION.

While Engaged to One Man, She Stole to Give to Another.

Mary Golding, the cashier of the Larkin Soap Company, who is charged with embezzlement, confessed over again to the Justices of Special Sessions yesterday that she had not taken the money to buy medicine for an invalid sister, as she once said, but to give it to a man. He has been taking her out to theatres and restaurants without the knowledge of the man to whom she was engaged.

From a detective agency it was learned that the man is Alexander G. Simmons, a salesman, who has admitted receiving the money from Miss Golding. Miss Golding had pleaded guilty to a theft of $12 and was arraigned in Special Sessions yesterday for sentence. Justice Olmsted announced that sentence would be suspended till Tuesday to give the probationary officer a chance to investigate certain statements made by the young woman.

In two affidavits Miss Golding swore that she became acquainted with Alexander G. Simmons on a street car. This was in April, 1902, and in June, she says, he began asking her for money. She gave him from $10 to $25 almost every time he called, which was two or three times a week. The last time she gave him money was on Oct. 11, $14. She says she gave him $200 at one time.

In her other affidavit Miss Golding estimated that she had stolen not less than $1,500. Manager May of the firm's White Street store said that $5,000 would be much nearer the amount.

Young Simmons lives at 471 Macon Street, Brooklyn, and was employed in the jewelry store of S. Cottle & Co. at 31 East Seventeenth Street until yesterday morning, when the firm learned of Miss Golding's confession and discharged him.

NEW BRIDGE TERMINAL PLAN.

Trouble to Get Underground Station—Cold Comfort for City Lodgers.

Before going into executive session to discuss the budget for 1906, the Board of Estimate took up yesterday the Bridge Department plans for the terminal of the new Manhattan Bridge. This has been giving the bridge engineers great trouble, it being a problem how to bring the approach to the ground on the Manhattan side, because of the elevated railroad tracks in Division Street. The plans now submitted show the end of the bridge at Canal Street, where it is proposed to take all the block bounded by Canal, Bayard, and Chrystie Streets and the Bowery. This would give room for switching at the terminal.

Nelson P. Lewis, Chief Engineer to the Board of Estimate, said that unless the Interborough Company lowers its Division Street tracks trains cannot be run from the bridge into an underground terminal.

A further report will be made Nov. 17.

Commissioner Tully of the Department of Charities submitted his plans for the new municipal lodging house. He reported that the lowest bid he had received for the building was $98,000 more than the amount appropriated. Mr. Tully said he has now room for only 300 applicants for relief, and that when cold weather comes he will not be able to help those who need shelter. The whole matter was referred to the Controller.

Mr. Tully also asked $10,000 for a convalescent hospital at Coney Island and $250,000 to go on with his sanitarium for consumptive patients on Staten Island.

Controller Grout said after the meeting that the department heads would have to be satisfied with much less money than they have asked. The Board of Education will get nearly all the three-million-dollar increase demanded.

ARREST DUE TO BETRAYAL

Friend of Cunliffe Met Him and Got $2,500 Reward—Cunliffe Reaches Pittsburg.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Oct. 20.—The chances that the police will recover nearly the whole of the $101,000 stolen from the Adams Express Company in Pittsburg by Edward G. Cunliffe, who was arrested here yesterday and taken to Pittsburg to-day, seem bright.

To-night $9,065 was found in a trunk belonging to a butler in a prominent family at Black Rock, but the butler and the family by whom he is employed were ignorant of the fact that the money was in the house.

Although there is a possibility that the remaining $10,500 has been destroyed, the police are of the opinion that another accomplice of Cunliffe may reveal the hiding place of the missing sum. In round numbers, $90,000 has been found in the past twenty-four hours. After figuring on about $500 as the amount which Cunliffe spent, $10,500 is left to be accounted for.

The discovery of the money in the Black Rock home to-night was, it is asserted, brought about by keeping a watch on one of Cunliffe's chance acquaintances, George Eisenman, who was with Cunliffe when he was arrested yesterday morning. According to Eisenman's story, he met Cunliffe in a cheap hotel on Wednesday night. Cunliffe had a package with him, and as the men were about to leave each other Cunliffe said he wanted Eisenman to take care of the package, as it was laundry which he wanted to keep in a safe place. Eisenman took the bundle to his sister's house, 688 Nash Street, and when alone opened it and found the money.

Eisenman was shadowed to-day and he was seen to give a small package to his friend the butler. To-night Eisenman was taken to the Black Rock House and asked the butler for the package. The butler went to his trunk and turned it over to Capt. Arnold of the Detective Bureau. The butler had not been told what was in the package. Capt. Arnold will not reveal the name of the butler or the family which employs him.

Eisenman was taken to Police Headquarters, but was released later.

In one of the talks which Capt. Arnold had with Cunliffe last night, the prisoner made a proposition to give Arnold $40,000 of the $80,000 which he had sent to his brother-in-law, Joseph W. Boardman, in Bristol, in return for a promise of secrecy. After Cunliffe's plans were laid bare the detective told Cunliffe that the money he intended to split up had already been found.

It appears that Cunliffe was betrayed by his friend, James Missett. Missett formerly lived in Bristol and knew Cunliffe well. At the present time Missett is employed in one of the cheap hotels in the section of the city in which Cunliffe was captured. Last Tuesday Missett went into the Tremont Hotel barroom and saw Cunliffe standing at the bar. Missett went up to him and said:

"Hello, Cunliffe; what are you doing here?"

Cunliffe turned round and pretended not to know Missett; who was sure of his man. Missett then said: "Why, you know me; I'm Missett. You used to play policy with me in Bristol."

Cunliffe still denied that he had ever seen Missett. The next morning Missett went to New York and visited the Pinkerton Agency.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I know where Cunliffe is and I want to know what reward is offered for him."

He was told the reward was $2,500.

The Pinkerton people thought at first that Missett was a crank, but he assured them that he was in earnest, and asked for a written agreement that he would get the reward if he told where the missing man could be found. This was agreed to and Missett gave the information. The arrest of Cunliffe followed. To-night Missett returned from New York with the $2,500 reward.

GEN. BROOKE A WITNESS.

Revoked Cuban Countess's Concession for Sanitary Reasons.

Judge Holt, in the United States District Court, yesterday, listened to the evidence of Major Gen. John R. Brooke in the action brought against him individually, and as Governor General of Cuba in 1899 and 1900, by Dona Maria Francesca O'Reilly De Camera, Countess of Buena Vista, of Havana, Cuba.

The Countess inherited the concession of killing all the beef cattle slaughtered in Havana. For this a royalty of $2 per head was paid. This concession gave the Countess's family a comfortable income for several hundred years. When Gen. Brooke became Governor General of Cuba he deprived the family of the concession and gave it to the municipality of Havana.

Under the terms of the treaty the United States Government had no authority to deprive any one of valid property rights. The Countess sued the General and the Government. The Government's demurrer was overruled by Judge Holt.

Gen. Brooke said that he took away the concession because the slaughter houses maintained under the concession were frightfully unsanitary, not because the money was needed by the City of Havana.

The lawyers have until Nov. 10 to submit briefs. Judge Holt's decision will be appealed, and final decision may not be reached for several years.

JOHN M'CARTY DIES AT HIS GOSHEN FARM

TWO FAMILIES USE HIS NAME

John McCarty, who was a State Senator from Brooklyn for several years, died yesterday at Parkway Farm, his country home in Goshen, N. Y.

The body will be brought to Brooklyn from Goshen to-day, and the funeral probably will be held to-morrow. Some relatives and friends in Brooklyn were disturbed yesterday by the fear that there might be a meeting at the funeral of two women, one his widow and another who also was known as McCarthy's wife in Pittsfield, Mass. Interest is shown also in the question how the ex-Senator's will disposes of his estate.

John McCarty was for many years one of the Willoughby Street "Big Four," the other three being the late Hugh McLaughlin, James Shevlin, and Patrick H. McCarren. Mr. McCarty was born in Westchester County about sixty years ago, but had lived in Brooklyn since boyhood. He worked for a time in the navy yard, but made the acquaintance of Hugh McLaughlin and got into politics. After a clerkship in the Health Department and then in a police court, he was elected to the Board of Aldermen in 1878, serving until 1891, part of the time as President of the board. He was elected State Senator to succeed John C. Jacobs, re-elected and nominated a third time. He received the certificate of election, but his Republican opponent, the late Henry Wolfsrt, contested and won. Mr. McCarty was for years in the real estate business in Montague Street, and was regarded as successful. He was fond of trotting horses, and expended a great deal of money on his stock farm at Goshen, which he bought about eight years ago from Bernard McCaffrey of Brooklyn. He owned Joe Patchen, 2:01¼, sire of Dan Patch, world's champion pacing stallion.

About a year ago as a result of newspaper reports of a burglary in the Summer home of ex-Senator John McCarty in Pittsfield came the disclosure that a woman there was known as McCarty's wife, who had three sons known as the children of the Senator. On the purchase and remodeling of the home in which the Pittsfield family lived, the ex-Senator, it was said, had spent $40,000. The sons, bearing the names of John McCarty, Jr., William McCarty, and Arthur McCarty, are respectively 10, 15, and 11 years old. John is a student at Andover. The Pittsfield woman, it was said, had lived in Albany and been known there as Mrs. McCarty when McCarty was in the Senate in the early nineties. She is about 50 years old.

At the time of the disclosures ex-Senator McCarty denied that the Pittsfield woman was his wife. She is a relative of the Brooklyn Mrs. McCarty, who was Miss Margaret O'Neill of Hicks Street. Mr. McCarty married about forty years ago. Two sons by this marriage died in youth.

SMOKING ON THE PLATFORM

No Crime—Merely a Cause for Ejection from the Elevated.

Samuel W. Sadler, a young clerk of 32 Leroy Street, smoked a cigar, which he declares was a good one, on the downtown platform of the elevated railroad station at Eighty-first Street and Columbus Avenue early Thursday morning. He was arrested when he refused to obey the order of Abram Kaplan, the ticket chopper, to stop.

Sadler spent the night at the West Sixty-eighth Street Police Station. Magistrate Wahle discharged him in the West Side Court yesterday, saying:

"It is ridiculous to make arrests of this kind. Perhaps the prisoner violated the rules of the company, but he committed no crime. If he was disorderly the company had a right to eject him from the platform of the station, but no right to order his arrest."

Mr. Russell is also receiver of the assets of Frederick De Turckheim on a petition filed against him on Oct. 12.

Political X-Rays

By LESLIE CHASE

The writer of this book will not accept any money benefit from it.

DIVISIONS: Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, Mr. Rudyard Kipling, Wall Street and the Legion of Honor, Christian Science, The Russo-Japanese War, China, &c.

The London Times: It consists almost entirely of a collection of racy morsels on leading Americans and many other subjects.

The N. Y. Herald (Paris:) "X-Rays" touch upon every important topic which has come to the front during the past few years.

The N. Y. Sun: He can see as little to admire in Mr. Roosevelt as in Mr. Croker.

The New Age (London:) Rays now of flashing wit, now of burning indignation, now of Rabelaisian humor.

Professor Charles Eliot Norton: The "Rays" are powerful enough to penetrate through the triple mail of wrong—the mail of commercialism, militarism, and imperialism—in which our country is now encased.

M. Yves Guyot: Vous etes bien severe pour M. Roosevelt. Vous avez "des mots a l'emporte-piece."

Professor GOLDWIN SMITH: I read with particular interest the part relating to the Spanish war.

Professor WILLIAM JAMES: "X-Rays" has made me laugh heartily on my twenty-first day of confinement to the house from influenza—a good test.

FRIARS' LANDS PAID FOR.

United States Completes Purchase of Their Philippine Properties.

Payment was made yesterday by the United States of the balance due by the Government for the lands purchased from the Friars in the Philippines. The amount of the payment was about $3,250,000, the balance of the $7,000,000 paid for the lands having been turned over some time ago. The payment was made through the International Banking Corporation as the fiscal agents of the Bureau of Insular Affairs.

The delay in the payment of this money for so long after the sale of the lands was agreed upon was due to difficulties over some titles. These matters have now been settled.

CAPT. DOOLEY HAS MADE HIS OWN CURFEW LAW

No Improper Woman Shall Be Out Alone After 10, He Says.

IF YOU SEE ONE, ARREST HER

And If the Magistrates Release Her Arrest Her Again—Thirty Locked Up Last Night.

Police Capt Dooley, recently appointed by Commissioner McAdoo to the command of the Nineteenth, better known as the Tenderloin, Precinct, has devised and promulgated for that territory a sort of "curfew" law, which is new and remarkable among the police regulations of this city. This is Capt. Dooley's new law:

"No woman, believed by the policeman on post to be an improper person, may walk through the streets of the Tenderloin without an escort after 10 P. M. Any such woman who does shall be arrested."

Some of Capt. Dooley's policemen, apparently uncertain about the characters of some of the women who pass them, are interpreting this new rule of their commander as applying to all women out without escorts after 10 o'clock at night. This fact came out yesterday morning in the Jefferson Market Court, when three women, two of whom averred indignantly that they were respectable, were arraigned before Magistrate Mayo charged with vagrancy. Their offense was walking in the street in Capt. Dooley's bailiwick after 10 o'clock at night.

The two women admitted in court that they had given fictitious names, because the reputation of their families was at stake. They professed the utmost indignation over their treatment. The third woman admitted that she had been arrested before. All three were discharged.

"Mary Sage" came first. Policeman O'Flaherty appeared to prosecute her.

"She is a disorderly person," O'Flaherty averred.

"What did she do?" asked Magistrate Mayo.

"I didn't see her doing anything. She was on the street. That was all."

"A woman has a perfect right to walk the street at any hour of the day or night provided she behaves herself," declared the Magistrate with emphasis, "and the police have no right to detain, molest, or arrest her."

"I have orders from Capt. Dooley to arrest women found on my post after 10 o'clock at night if they are alone," persisted O'Flaherty. He has the post on Seventh Avenue, between Thirty-fourth and Forty-second Streets.

"Discharged," was all that the Magistrate said.

Next came Policeman McDonough with two women. The prisoners said they were Rose Schwartz and Bella Kingston. The policeman said the women were behaving themselves, but they were disorderly characters.

Magistrate Mayo promptly ordered their release. Then he read a leeture to the policemen, telling them that they were wrong in making such arrests, and he would discharge such prisoners as fast as they were brought before him.

A TIMES reporter sought Capt. Dooley and asked him if he had ordered all unescorted women seen in the street after 10 o'clock at night to be locked up.

"The statement that I ever issued any such order," replied the Captain, "is absurd on its face. Policeman O'Flaherty got things muddled or failed to make himself clear. No sane man would instruct those under him to arrest respectable women at any time.

"The order I did give was to arrest every woman known to be disorderly if she appeared in the street in my precinct without an escort after 10 o'clock.

"A disorderly woman can't be orderly if she shows herself in the street in the Tenderloin late at night. If she is in the street, it is prima facie evidence that she is violating the law or intends to violate it, and I have told my men to bring them in as fast as they appear.

"It has been customary in the past for the plain-clothes men to handle this class of cases, and the uniformed force has had nothing to do with the women. The way I figure it is that the citizens of New York are paying policemen in uniform $1,400 a year a piece to keep the city decent and clean. The policemen may as well be kept busy.

"I was sent up here to clean up the Tenderloin, and I propose to do it. When I issued my instructions I told my men that it didn't make any difference to me if the women were turned loose every morning by the Magistrates. The men must arrest them over again as many times as they walked the streets after the hour fixed as the limit.

"I mean to make the Tenderloin too hot to hold such characters. This is the only way I know of to accomplish that end. The uniformed men are on the same beat night after night, and they are in a position to know when a woman is disorderly."

"Then the policemen are sole judges as to whether or not a woman is respectable, and may arrest her, no matter if her conduct is a model of decorum?" asked the reporter.

"If a woman is known to be disorderly by the policeman, it doesn't make the slightest difference what she is doing. He must bring her in. If a policeman doesn't know the disorderly characters on his beat, then he has no business on the force."

Last night's doings of Capt. Dooley's policemen in the Tenderloin interested hundreds of people. Between dusk and 6 o'clock three women were arrested as vagrants and locked up. Not one of them was accused of having conducted herself in a disorderly manner.

One of the first gathered in was Mary Sage, whom Magistrate Mayo had discharged earlier in the day. Policeman O'Flaherty again arrested her. O'Flaherty took in several other women before the night was over, as did McDonough, the other policeman, who had been lectured by Magistrate Mayo for making unwarranted arrests.

"How do you know the women you are bringing in are disorderly?" the police were asked.

"General knowledge," they answered.

"Captain's orders."

By midnight thirty women had been locked up by uniformed men on the vagrancy charge and the bondsmen were working overtime. At 10 o'clock Policeman Carl Nillson, whose beat begins at Broadway and Fourteenth Street, had seven women lined up at a patrol box. The unusual sight drew a crowd which thronged the street from side to side and blocked traffic. As soon as he had seen his prisoners safely in the station the policeman went back and arrested five more women, whom he lined up as before until the wagon arrived. In every case he made a simple vagrancy charge.

Maggie Ramsey, who gave her address as 258 West Eighty-seventh Street, was walking down Broadway with Francis Foster, a young man who said he lived in Central Park West. She was arrested at Thirty-sixth Street by Policeman Baurey. Foster followed to the station and walked to the Sergeant's desk with the prisoner.

"What do you want?" the Sergeant demanded.

"I want to know what the charge against this woman is," the man replied. "I've known her for a long time. She is a bookbinder and an honest girl."

"She's a disorderly person," said Baurey. "I know her."

The girl was locked up and Foster hurried away, saying he would try and get bail for her.

"Your men began making arrests before 10 o'clock," Capt. Dooley was told.

"I have nothing to say," he replied.

"But a policeman arrested a girl who had an escort."

"I don't want to talk."

The men on patrol said that at roll call, Capt. Dooley had told them to arrest every woman they believed to be an improper character any minute after darkness set in.

Police Commissioner McAdoo said he would not discuss Capt. Dooley's new rule until it was brought before him officially.

The Tenderloin police precinct, to which Capt. Dooley is applying this rule, extends from Fourteenth Street to Forty-second Street and Fourth Avenue to Seventh Avenue, taking in one side of each of these. It includes both Broadway and Fifth Avenue.

BANDITS TO FREE CAPTIVES.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

TANGIER, Oct. 20.—His Majesty's ship Pathfinder returned this afternoon from Ceuta. Communication was opened with the brigands who captured Capt. Crowther and Lieut. Hatton. They state that they demand only the release of their relative and chief Valiente. No political concessions are asked for, and no ransom.

The moderate nature of the demands is believed to be due to the fact that the brigands have no large following in the Anjera Mountains and are therefore afraid to ask concessions which might raise feeling against them among the tribes.

The Pathfinder will leave here shortly, taking Valiente to Ceuta, where his exchange for the captives will be arranged. It is hoped that the matter will be concluded to-morrow satisfactorily—if the release of a brigand who has committed more than one murder and is imprisoned on the complaints of at least three legations can be described as satisfactory.

TANGIER, Oct. 20.—Negotiations for the liberation of the two British officers who were captured by Moroccan tribesmen have been successful.

The British scout ship Pathfinder sailed to-night for Ceuta with Valiente, the brigand chief, on board, to effect an exchange of prisoners.

TOGO LAUDS NELSON.

Trafalgar Fought 100 Years Ago To-day—Message from Dewey.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—The national celebration in honor of Nelson, which will culminate in ceremonies at the Nelson Monument in Trafalgar Suqare to-morrow, the centenary of Nelson's death, were begun to-night by a banquet in Fishmongers' Hall. Baron Hayashi, the Japanese Minister, was among those present.

In the course of the proceedings a telegram was read from Admiral Togo expressing, on the occasion of this centenary, "our ever-increasing admiration for and devotion to the great Admiral."

Baron Hayashi in a speech declared that Lord Nelson's memory was as much revered in the Japanese Navy as it was in that of Great Britain.

The Nelson Column in Trafalgar Square has been beautifully decorated by the Navy League, and around its base to-morrow will be arranged floral tributes from all parts of the empire.

Among the telegrams already received is one from Admiral Dewey, who sends a glowing tribute, concluding with the words: "These hundred years have only made his glory brighter."

It Is Said It Will Be Increased Because of the British Alliance.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

TOKIO, Oct. 20.—It is rumored that the Government intends to seek the consent of the Diet to the increase of the army from thirteen to twenty divisions in order that Japan may be better qualified to discharge the obligations of the alliance with Great Britain.

It is believed that the Government intends to station two army divisions in the Liao-Tung Peninsula and two in Korea, the latter under Gen. Hasegawa and the former under Baron Oshima, who will be Viceroy of Kwan-Tung.

In connection with the refloating of the Pobieda the Emperor has addressed a message of thanks to the officers by whose ability four battleships and two cruisers, besides other vessels, have been raised at Port Arthur and added to the Japanese Navy.

ARRANGING NEW RUSSIAN LOAN.

Financiers in St. Petersburg Include Perkins and J. P. Morgan, Jr.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 20.—A group of international financiers, including representatives of the Crédit Lyonnais, Baron Hottinguer, and the Banque de Paris, of Paris; the Mendelssohns of Berlin, and the Barings of London, began conferences this morning with Finance Minister Kokovsoff regarding the contemplated new loan.

The amount of the loan has not yet been decided upon, and depends on whether an international or a French loan is arranged. At the Ministry of Finance $250,000,000 is mentioned as the sum in mind. The French bankers expect that the loan will not be more than $200,000,000, pointing out that the largest Russian loan hitherto contracted in France was $160,000,000.

If the negotiations are successful the issuance of the loan is expected early in November.

George W. Perkins and J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr., did not arrive here till this afternoon, their train having been delayed. Their first audience of M. Kokovsoff will probably be to-morrow.

Charles R. Flint of New York has returned to St. Petersburg.

Gen. Gripenberg to be Military Commander of St. Petersburg.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 20.—Owing largely to the banishment of his eldest son, the Grand Duke Cyril, and also on account of failing health, the Grand Duke Vladimir, eldest uncle of Emperor Nicholes, has tendered his resignation as Commander of the Military District of St. Petersburg, and his resignation hae been accepted.

He will be succeeded by Lieut. Gen. Gripenberg.

Rossed Pulp Wood Duty Free.

BURLINGTON, Vt., Oct. 20.—The Board of General Appraisers of New York was sustained by United States District Judge H. H. Wheeler to-day in a finding that no duty should be assessed on Rossed pulp wood brought into this country from Canada. The test case was that of the United States against C. W. Pierce. The assessors of this district had taxed a shipment 20 per cent. Refund must be made to all other wood pulp importers for duty paid since the suit was instituted. A large amount is involved. "Rossed" pulp wood is that which has been put through a machine which scours the bark, knots and rough places from the log.

HIGGINS GETTING READY FOR SPEAKERSHIP FIGHT

But for the Present Will Reserve His Ammunition.

HERE, BUT FAILS TO SEE ODELL

As to Cheaper Gas, Ask the Commission—Can't Remove Kilburn or Hendricks.

Gov. Frank Wayland Higgins came here yesterday and let it be known that he intends to have something to say about who shall be chosen Speaker of the Assembly to succeed the late S. Fred Nixon.

Gov. Higgins called at the Republican State Headquarters in the Fifth Avenue Hotel to see State Chairman Odell, but was informed that the State Chairman was making his headquarters at the Republican Club. Gov. Higgins did not go to the Republican Club to see the State Chairman. He remained in the city last night, but will return to Albany to-day.

The Governor did not visit the headquarters of the Republican Mayoralty candidate, William M. Ivins. He also said he did not expect to appear at any Republican meetings in this city in the campaign.

"Are you taking any part in the Speakership campaign?" Gov. Higgins was asked.

"Not yet, but I may do so later," he replied.

"What circumshtances will lead yon to do so?"

"Somebody is likely to be elected whom I don't think should be elected. In that case I will have something to say, but what I do I will do right out in the open. There will be no concealment of my position or views. However, I shall do nothing until after election. It is possible that some gentlemen who entertain ambitions to be elected Speaker may not be returned. It would be idle, therefore, for me to take a position in the matter at this time. I shall reserve my ammunition."

Gov. Higgins admitted that Assemblyman James T. Rogers of Binghamton, the majority leader, had called on him yesterday. As majority leader of the Assembly, Mr. Rogers is in direct line of succession to the Speakership. He is an active candidate for the place and is understood to be the first choice of the Platt forces. Gov. Higgins declined to express his views on the candidacy of Mr. Rogers. He said there were nine candidates in the field for the Speakership and five of them had already called on him to make their ambitions known.

Assemblyman Edwin A. Merritt, Jr., of St. Lawrence is understood to be State Chairman Odell's first choice for the Speakership. Merritt is also being strongly backed by Senator Malby. Assemblyman Charles W. Mead of Albany has the backing of William Barnes and will be the Platt candidate in case Majority Leader Rogers is turned down. Assemblyman Sherman Moreland of Elmira is being backed by Senator Brackett and Congressman Fassett. Robert Lynn Cox of Buffalo is the choice of William C. Warren.

Gov. Higgins was asked whom his friends were supporting. He replied:

"I guess I have friends among the supporters of all the candidates."

Asked if he had seen Senator Platt since the interview given by Senator Platt at the Hotel Gotham in which he declared that he was opposed to the Governor's renomination, Mr. Higgins said he had not, nor had he heard from the Senator except indirectly.

"Will you be a candidate for re-election?" the Governor was asked.

"I will cross that bridge when I come to it," he replied.

"Will Senator Platt's declaration against you influence your decision?"

"Not in the slightest."

Gov. Higgins was asked what the State Gas Commission had been doing toward getting cheaper gas for the people of New York City. He replied that it would be better to ask the commission. He understood the commission had been quite busy, but he did not know just what had been accomplished.

"Is your attitude toward State Superintendent of Insurance Hendricks and State Superintendent of Banks Kilburn unchanged?" the Governor was asked.

"It is," he replied.

"You have no intention of removing either of them?"

"I couldn't remove either of them. I have not that power. All I could do would be to recommend their removal to the State Senate."

Gov. Higgins's wife and daughter accompanied him to the city. The Governor said his chief purpoee in coming here was to give them an opportunity to do some shopping.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Oct. 20.—Mrs. Georgia Ingerick, who was terribly injured two weeks ago, when her little daughter, Alice, and Willis and Fred Olney were murdered near this city, was this morning told of her child's death and of the details of the crime.

By permiesion of physicians this morning the District Attorney and several officers went to the bedside of Mrs. Ingerick. She asked, "How is Alice?" When told of her child's death ehe cried, "Dear Alice! My poor little girl! I will never see her again," end then sobbed for some minutes.

She was severely questioned for an hour, but all efforts to get her to tell of the crime failed.

There was an exciting chase to-day near this city, in which a posse of detectives and Deputy Sheriffs and a reputed "wild man of the woods" participated for a mile. The man has been seen several times in the woods near the scene of the murder. He was not caught.

$10,000 FOR CHARITY.

Patrons of Siegel Cooper Company Will Decide Its Apportionment.

The Siegel Cooper Company at their store, Sixth Avenue and Eighteenth Street, have set apart $10,000 to be paid to the benevolent and charitable institutions of New York and its vicinity, the patrons of the store to decide on the charities that are to share in the fund. Each ten-cent purchase represents a ballot.

The first prize is $1,000. The second prize is $500, and the third $250. Among the 20 organizations or institutions next in number of votes $2,000 is to be divided. To the 30 recipients of the next greatest number of votes $75 each is to be given. To the 80 recipients of the next, according to the voting, $50 each is to be given.

The balloting, which is to last from now until Jan. 1, is already spirited. After a lively contest last year the Salvation Army proved the winner of the $1,000 prize.

PARSONS SUCCEEDS PALLAS.

But His Appointment as Park Commissioner Is Only Temporary.

Samuel Parsons, Jr., who for fifteen years was Superintendent of Parks in this city and for some time has been the landscape architect for the Park Board, was named by Mayor McClellan yesterday to be President of the Park Commission in succession to the late Commissioner Pallas.

The appointment is understood to be temporary, as it was not the intention of the Mayor to fill the vacancy until after election. However, it was found that the charter required the approval of the "President of the board" to every contract executed, and to the payrolls, so it was necessary to make an appointment at once. Mr. Parsons probably will go back to his old place as landscape architect on Jan. 1.

He has been connected with the Park Department for more than twenty years. He is the designer of the new Washington Park system, of the San Diego Park of 1,400 acres, and of many other parks, cemeteries, and country places of the United States. He is Vice President of the American Society of Landscape Architects.

THE originality of flavor of the Murad is so pronounced that I have been asked many times if this cigarette contained a new kind of Turkish leaf, heretofore withheld from the general market. It does not.

MURAD CIGARETTES

do contain very careful selections from all the tobacco fields of Turkey, but that originality of flavor is due not so much to the leaf as to its blending. Such a perfect blend was never reached before in the making of Turkish cigarettes. It realizes for the first time the full natural richness of the leaf. The flavor is original because it was never produced before.

POWER CRASH COST HIM $3,000,000, HOADLEY SAYS

Judson Told Him Astor and Vanderbilt Were Ready to Buy.

BUT TOOK STOCK HIMSELF

Witness Declares He Could Have Sent Judson to Jail, for He Was a Confessed Thief.

Joseph H. Hoadley, President of the International Power Company, was on the witness stand again yesterday in the Supreme Court, where he is a defendant with Joseph Leiter in a suit brought by the brokerage firm of Franklin, Scott & Co., to recover $65,800 lost in Power stock. They allege that Hoadley and Leiter were interested in a pool with Cyrus Field Judson until the bubble burst on April 30, 1902. Hoadley denies this, but admits that he was interested in a pool with Judson the previous year.

Edward L. Mooney, counsel for the brokers, cross-examined Hoadley, who had testified the day before that he was a mechanical engineer and knew nothing of the ways of Wall Street when he first came to New York. Hoadley testified that when the Power stock reached 140 Judson told him that he had about sold the stock to John Jacob Astor, Cornelius Vanderbilt, and John R. Drexel.

George R. Graham, counsel for Hoadley, objected to this line of testimony.

"If I have to stay here until the Court House falls down I am going to bring this out," retorted Mr. Mooney.

"Well, then," said Mr. Graham, "you'll be crushed in the collapse."

"Not till I get through with it," argued Mr. Mooney. "Here we have John Jacob Astor and Cornelius Vanderbilt dragged in by the heels, and I propose to go on. Now, Mr. Hoadley, what day was it that the stock reached 140, and Judson told you he had about sold the stock to John Jacob Astor and Cornelius Vanderbilt?"

"As near as I can say," replied the witness, "it was about April 16. If that was not the date it was whatever day the stock touched 140."

Q.—Mr. Judson had no right to sell this stock? A.—None whatever. My understanding was that arrangements had been made that I could sell the stock to Mr. Astor and Mr. Vanderbilt. I would have been glad to get rid of such a large block to them.

Q.—What became of all the stock that Judson then held? A.—I made a demand for it. I asked him to stand ready to deliver the stock to me. I tried to get in communication with Mr. Leiter, so that he could put up his share, but could not get any satisfaction from him.

Q.—Then you only told Judson to get ready to deliver the stock? A.—Yes.

Mr. Hoadley said that he demanded the delivery of the stock several times after Feb. 18, 1902, but did not get it. He afterward learned that Judson had converted the stock. Judson, the witness said, had pledged some of his stock and some of the International Power Company's stock with the Bowling Green Trust Company, the Knickerbocker Trust Company, and the North American Trust Company for money for his own use.

Asked how it was that Judson could borrow money on his stock without his, Hoadley's, indorsement, the witness said he did not know.

"You could have made millions of dollars out of the stock and still you kept out of the market," said Mr. Mooney.

"Yes."

"Why?"

"For the interest of the company. We had just completed a combustible engine that I believed and still believe will revolutionize motive power and make the company's stock much more valuable. I did not sell and will not sell the stock today."

Mr. Mooney smiled and so did some members of the jury. After the crash came Hoadley said he went into the market and bought up some of the stock that Judson had appropriated. It took a million dollars of his money to get it back, he said.

Hoadley was questioned as to his dealings in the stock with Judson. He said that when the stock was selling at 130 Judson would send for it and get it at 122, with the understanding that he, Judson, would sell it, and pay the difference to Hoadley. He could not say exactly how many shares he sold to Judson below the market price. Judson told him that John R. Drexel had put up a million dollars, and they—Judson and Drexel—were trading in the market.

Q.—When you sold stock to Judson at 105 you had a right to call that stock back from Judson when the stock reached 200? A.—Yes.

Q.—Don't you know that the Bank of England could not stand that? A.—I don't know anything about that.

Q.—And you mean to say that you sold to Judson below the market? A.—Yes, under the circumstances I have just explained.

Q.—You loaned stock to Judson without his putting up any money? A.—Yes, as a matter of kindness to Mr. Judson.

Q.—Was Judson the whole market in International Power? A.—He was.

Q.—And yet you have practically said that you had him in the hollow of your hand? A.—I thought so once, but found out I hadn't got him at all.

Hoadley said that when Judson confessed to him that he had got away with $1,500,000, he, Hoadley, feared that he was ruined. He had agreed to take over a lot of the stock, and when he went to Judson to get it he made the discovery that he had bought that very stock on the market, Judson having disposed of it.

Q.—And yet you sold 9,700 more shares the day before than you held? A.—I don't believe that I did—I may have sold some stock for friends.

Q.—Did you know on the day of the crash that you got all of Judson's cash balances? A.—I don't know, but I hope I did. I told my brother to get everything Judson had except his personal effects.

Q.—You even took a miserable little bank balance of $871? A.—I did.

Hoadley said that he could have sent Judson to jail, that he was a confessed thief.

On redirect examination Hoadley was asked how much money he lost on the day of the crash, and he replied:

"I lost $3,000,000 on that day."

The trial will be continued to-day.

MAY PAY BANK DEBTS TO SAVE POLITICIANS

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 20.—The Pennsylvania Republican machine is working to save itself from exposure as a result of the enterprise National Bank failure. Representatives from Philadelphia are here trying to get from Bank Examiner Cunningham a list of the notes known as "political paper" which the bank carried. It is proposed to take up all of this so that it will not show in the final report to the Controller of the Currency. It is asserted that $500,000 of this class of securities was carried by the bank.

The Directors of the bank have decided to close up the affairs and pay off every cent. The examiner estimates that the deficiency is about $1,200,000. The capital, surplus, and undivided profits aggregating $732,000, have been wiped out. This leaves $718,000 to be made up. The stockholders will be assessed $200,000, leaving $518,000 for the Directors to make good.

The funeral of the cashier, T. L. Clark, was held this afternoon at the family residence, Bellevue, only immediate relatives attending.

It was reported this afternoon that among the private papers of Clark in a vault of the bank, was found a complete confession of the operations which brought about his ruin and the closing of the bank, giving the names of politicians concerned. The paper, according to report, is in the hands of Bank Examiner Cunningham.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 20.—Senator Penrose to-night gave out the following statement:

"I have no obligations of any kind in the Enterprise National Bank. I am not connected in any way, directly or indirectly, with notes of W. H. Andrews, if there are any such in the Enterprise National Bank. I have no interest whatever in the Pennsylvania Development Company, or with any other project in New Mexico. Any intimations to the contrary are malicious falsehoods for political effect."

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Distribution of Charges for Bottling Must Stand—Other Decisions.

In a decision by Judge Somerville, the Board of United States General Appraisers overruled yesterday a protest filed by Sherwood & Sherwood of Portland, Oregon, regarding the distribution of charges for corking, wiring, and labeling of certain bottles. The Collector of Customs added these charges to the value of the bottles in ascertaining the duty instead of estimating the value of the contents. The board holds that the Collector committed no error, and that the assessment must stand.

Other importers' claims overruled were those of John Barrack of Juneau, Alaska; the Stone & Downer Company, the F. E. Jones Company, C. F. Hovey & Co., O. N. Purdy & Co., and the Mark Cross Company of Boston; the Southern Bagging Company of Norfolk, Va.; A. G. Johnson, Chicago; F. Walter Degener of St. Louis, the American Import Company, Reiss Brothers & Co. of San Fancisco; H. Goldsmith & Co. and the Owl Grocer Company, Eagle Pass, Texas; E. Franco of San Juan, Porto Rico, and Williams, Brown & Earle of Philadelphia.

The board sustained claims filed by George Borgfeldt & Co. of Baltimore, A. R. Sullivan of Atlanta, Borgfeldt & Co. (2) of Boston, Maldonado & Co. and C. D. Bunker & Co. of San Francisco, P. McGettrick of Burlington, Vt.; Marshall Field & Co. and F. B. Vandegrift & Co. of Chicago.

Claims by Gimbel Brothers and Strawbridge & Clothier of Philadelphia and C. D. Bunker & Co. of San Francisco were sustained in part by the customs tribunal.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

RUTSER TENHAGEN.—Rutser Tenhagen, salesman at Rosendale, Ulster County, N. Y., has filed a petition in bankruptcy here, with liabilities of $965 and assets of $63. The debts were contracted in 1893 and 1894 as a partner in the firm of Tenhagen & Young.

ANNA A. BAILEY.—Anna A. Bailey of Mount Vernon has filed a petition in bankruptcy here, with liabilities of $3,076 and no assets. She has only one creditor, the Bowery Bank, which obtained a judgment against her on Jan. 16, 1901, for money loaned on a note of H. N. Bailey, which she indorsed.

ISAAC FREDERICKS.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Isaac Fredericks, dealer in men and women's furnishing goods at 64 Third Avenue by the following creditors: Zimmern & Levi, $214; Well & Livingston, $344, and Solomon Newville, $50. It was alleged that he is insolvent, made payments on Oct. 5 of $1,000 to certain creditors to prefer them, and transferred some of his property to various creditors. Judge Holt of the United States District Court appointed William M. Baird receiver of the assets, fixing his bond at $500. The stock is estimated at $1,500. He has been in business thirteen years, and on Feb. 1 last said he had a stock of $7,000.

HAIGHT & FREESE COMPANY.—Application was made yesterday to Judge Stover of the Supreme Court for the appointment of a receiver for the Haight & Freese Company, stock brokers, formerly at 63 Broadway, this city, and at various other places, by Georgs G. Turner and Harvey Watson, sole surviving Directors of the company, and the Judge reserved decision. The company's affairs have been in litigation for the past six months. Judge Lacombe of the United States Circuit Court, on May 9, appointed Beverly R. Robinson of this city, and James D. Colt of Boston receivers of the assets, which amount, it is said, to over $200,000, and they are still in possession. A creditors' petition in bankruptcy was also filed against the company on May 10, but nothing has been done in that matter since June 6.

WOULD CURB CORPORATIONS

Warns China, in Speech at Atlanta, Against Persisting in Boycott of American Goods.

ATLANTA, Ga., Oct. 20.—No fewer than 100,000 persons welcomed President Roosevelt to Atlanta this morning, and a large proportion of these heard him at the State Fair grounds deliver a speech in which he held up to public opprobrium men who debauch business or politics and win great fortunes by contempt of the rights of others.

Gov. Terrell previously had delivered a few remarks, in the course of which allusions to the President's efforts for international peace evoked prolonged applause. Mayor Woodward presented the President with a block of Georgia marble, a memento from Georgia's organized labor, prepared by union labor.

The President's speech was as follows:

"Here in this great industrial centre, in this city which is a typical Southern city, and therefore a typical American city, it is natural to consider certain phases of the many-sided industrial problem which this generation has to solve.

"In this world of ours it is practically impossible to get success of any kind on a large scale without paying something for it. The exceptions to the rule are too few to warrant our paying heed to them, and as a rule it may be said that something must be paid as an offset for everything we get and for everything we accomplish. This is notably true of our industrial life.

"The problems which we of America have to face to-day are very serious, but we will do well to remember that after all they are only part of the price which we have to pay for the triumphs we have won, for the high position to which we have attained. If we were a backward and stationary country we would not have to face these problems at all, but I think that most of us are agreed that to be backward and stationary would be altogether too heavy a price to pay for the avoidance of the problems in question.

"There are no labor troubles where there is no work to be done by labor. There are no troubles about corporations where the poverty of the community is such that it is not worth while to form corporations. There is no difficulty in regulating railroads where the resources of a region are so few that it does not pay to build railroads. There are many excellent people who shake their heads over the difficulties that as a Nation we now have to face; but their melancholy is not warranted save in a very partial degree, for most of the things of which they complain are the inevitable accompaniments of the growth and greatness of which we are proud.

"There is every reason why we should be vigilant in searching out what is wrong and unflinchingly resolute in striving to remedy it. But at the same time we must not blind ourselves to what has been accomplished for good, and above all we must not lose our heads and become either hysterical or rancorous in grappling with what is bad.

"Take such a question, for instance, as the question, or rather the group of questions, connected with the growth of corporations in this country. This growth has meant, of course, the growth of individual fortunes. Undoubtedly the growth of wealth in this country has had some very unfortunate accompaniments, but it seems to me that much the worst damage that people of wealth can do the rest of us is not any actual physical harm, but the awakening in our breasts of either the mean vice of worshipping mere wealth, and the man of mere wealth, for the wealth's sake; or the equally mean vice of viewing with rancorous envy and hatred the men of wealth merely because they are men of wealth.

"Envy is, of course, merely a kind of crooked admiration, and we often see the very man who in public is most intemperate in his denunciation of wealth in his private life most eager to obtain wealth, in no matter what fashion, and at no matter what moral cost.

"Undoubtedly there is need of regulation by the Government, in the interest of the public, of these great corporations which in modern life have shown themselves to be the most efficient business implements, and which are, therefore, the implements commonly employed by the owners of large fortunes. The corporation is the creature of the State. It should always be held accountable to some sovereign, and this accountability should be real and not sham. Therefore, in my judgement, all corporations doing an inter-State business, and this means the great majority of the largest corporations, should be held accountable to the Federal Government, because their accountability should be coextensive with their field of action.

"But most certainly we should not strive to prevent or limit corporate activity. We should strive to secure such effective supervision over it, such power of regulations over it, as to enable us to guarantee that its activity will be exercised only in ways beneficial to the public. The unwisdom of any well-meaning but misguided effort to check corporate activity has been shown in striking fashion in recent years by our experience in the Philippines and in Porto Rico.

"Our National legislators very properly determined that the islands should not be exploited by adventurers without regard to the interests of the people of the islands themselves. But unfortunately, in their zeal to prevent the islands from being improperly exploited, they took measures of such severity as to seriously, and in some respects vitally, hamper and retard the development of the islands.

"There is nothing that the islands need more than to have their great natural resources developed, and these resources can be developed only by the abundant use of capital, which, of course, will not be put into them unless on terms sufficiently advantageous to offer prospects of good remuneration. We have made the terms not merely hard, but often prohibitory, with the result that American capital goes into foreign countries, like Mexico, and is there used with immense advantage to the country in its development, while it cannot go into our own possessions or be used to develop the lands under our own flag. The chief sufferers by this state of things are the people of the islands themselves.

"It is impossible too strongly to insist upon what ought to be the patent fact that it is not only in the interest of the people of wealth themselves, but in our interest, in the interest of the public as a whole, that they should be treated fairly and justly; that if they show exceptional business ability they should be given exceptional reward for that ability.

"The tissues of our industrial fabric are interwoven in such complex fashion that what strengthens or weakens part also strengthens or weakens the whole.

"If we penalize industry we will ourselves in the end have to pay a considerable part of the penalty. If we make conditions such that the men of exceptional ability are able to secure marked benefits by the exercise of that ability, then we shall ourselves benefit somewhat. It is our interest no less than our duty to treat them fairly.

"On the other hand, it is no less their interest to treat us fairly—by 'us' I mean the great body of the people, the men of moderate or small fortunes, the farmers, the wage-workers, the smaller business men and professional men.

"The man of great means who achieves fortune by crooked methods does wrong to the whole body politic. But he not merely does wrong to, he becomes a source of imminent danger to, other men of great means; for his ill-won success tends to arouse a feeling of resentment, which, if it becomes inflamed, fails to differentiate between the men of wealth who have done decently and the men of wealth who have not done decently.

"The conscience of our people has been deeply shocked by the revelations made of recent years as to the way in which some of the great fortunes have been obtained and used, and there is, I think, in the minds of the people at large a strong feeling that a serious effort must be made to put a stop to the cynical dishonesty and contempt for right which have thus been revealed.

"I believe that something, and I hope that a good deal, can be done by law to remedy the state of things complained of. But when all that can be has thus been done, there will yet remain much which the law cannot touch, and which must be reached by the force of public opinion.

"There are men who do not divide actions merely into those that are honest and those that are not, but create a third subdivision—that of law honesty; of that kind of honesty which consists in keeping clear of the penitentiary. It is hard to reach astute men of this type save by making them feel the weight of an honest public indignation.

"We cannot afford in this country to draw the distinction as between rich man and poor man. The distinction upon which we must insist is the vital, deep-lying, unchangeable distinction between the honest man and the dishonest man, between the man who acts decently and fairly by his neighbor and with a quick sense of his obligations, and the man who acknowledges no internal law save that of his own will and appetite. Above all we should treat with a peculiarly contemptuous abhorrence the man who in a spirit of sheer cynicism debauches either our business life or our political life.

"There are men who use the phrase 'practical politics' as merely a euphemism for dirty politics, and it is such men who have brought the word 'politician' into discredit. There are other men who use the noxious phrase 'business is business' as an excuse and justification for every kind of mean and crooked work, and these men make honest Americans hang their heads because of some of the things they do.

"It is the duty of every honest patriot to rebuke in emphatic fashion alike the politician who does not understand that the only kind of 'practical politics' which a nation can with safety tolerate is that kind which we know as clean politics, and that we are as severe in our condemnation of the business trickery which succeeds as of the business trickery which fails. The scoundrel who fails can never by any possibility be as dangerous to the community as the scoundrel who succeeds, and of all the men in the country, the worst citizens, those who should excite in our minds the most contemptuous abhorrence, are the men who have achieved great wealth, or any other form of success, in any save a clean and straightforward manner.

"So much for the general subject of industrialism. Now, just a word in reference to one of the great staples of this country, which is peculiarly a staple of the Southern States. Of course I mean cotton. I am glad to see diversifications of industry in the South, the growth of manufactures as well as the growth of agriculture, and the growing growth of diversification of crops in agriculture. Nevertheless it will always be true that in certain of the Southern States cotton will be the basis of the wealth, the mainstay of prosperity in the future as in the past.

"The cotton crop is of enormous consequence to the entire country. It was the cotton crop of the South that brought four hundred million dollars of foreign gold into the United States last year, turning the balance of trade in our favor. The soil and climate of the South are such that she enjoys a practical monopoly in the production of raw cotton. No other clothing material can be accepted as a substitute for cotton. I welcome the action of the planters in forming a cotton association, and every assistance shall be given them that can be given them by the National Government.

"Moreover, we must not forget that the work of the manufacturers in the South supplements the work of the planter. It is an advantage to manufacture the raw material here, and sell to the world the finished goods. Under proper methods of distribution it may well be doubted whether there can be such a thing as overproduction of cotton. Last year's crop was nearly 14,000,000 bales, and yet the price was sufficiently high to give a handsome profit to the planter. The consumption of cotton increases each year, and new uses are found for it.

"This leads me to a matter of our foreign relations, which directly concerns the cotton planter. At present our market for cotton is largely in China. The boycott of our goods in China during the past year was especially injurious to the cotton manufacturers. This Government is doing, and will continue to do, all it can to put a stop to the boycott.

"But there is one measure to be taken toward this end in which I shall need the assistance of the Congress. We must insist firmly on our rights, and China must beware of persisting in a course of conduct to which we cannot honorably submit. But we in our turn must recognize our duties exactly as we insist upon our rights. We cannot go into the international court of equity unless we go in with clean hands. We cannot expect China to do us justice unless we do China justice.

"The chief cause in bringing about the boycott of our goods in China was undoubtedly our attitude toward the Chinese who come to this country. This attitude of ours does not justify the action of the Chinese in the boycott, and especially some of the forms which that action has taken. But the fact remains that in the past we have come short of our duty toward the people of China.

"It is our clear duty, in the interest of our own wage workers, to forbid all Chinese of the coolie class—that is, laborers, skilled or unskilled—from coming here. The greatest of all duties is National self-preservation, and the most important step in National self-preservation is to preserve in every way the well-being of the wage worker. I am convinced that the well-being of our wage workers demands the exclusion of the Chinese coolies, and it is therefore our duty to exclude them, just as it would be the duty of China to exclude American laboring men if they became in any way a menace to China by entering into her country. The right is reciprocal, and in our last treaty with China it was explicitly recognized as inhering in both nations.

"But we should not only operate the law with as little harshness as possible, but we should show every courtesy and consideration and every encouragement to all Chinese who are not of the laboring class to come to this country. Every Chinese traveler or student, business man or professional man, should be given the same right to entry to, and the same courteous treatment in, this country as are accorded to the student or traveler, the business man or professional man of any other nation. Our laws and treaties should be so framed as to guarantee to all Chinamen, save of the excepted coolie class, the same right of entry to this country and the same treatment while here as is guaranteed to citizens of any other nation.

"By executive action I am, as rapidly as possible, putting a stop to the abuses which have grown up during many years in the administration of this law. I can do a good deal, and will do a good deal even without the action of the Congress, but I cannot do all that should be done unless such action is taken, and that action I most earnestly hope will be taken.

"It is needed in our own interest, and especially in the interest of the Pacific slope and of the South Atlantic and Gulf States, for it is short-sighted indeed for us to permit foreign competitors to drive us from the great markets of China.

"Moreover, the action I ask is demanded by considerations that are higher than mere interest, for I ask it in the name of what is just and right. America should take the lead in establishing international relations on the same basis of honest and upright dealing which we regard as essential as between man and man."

While the President was speaking Mrs. Roosevelt had been entertained by a committee of 100 women at the Governor's mansion, on Peachtree Street. At 11:30 o'clock she was driven to Brookwood, a suburb, where the Washington train was stopped for her, and she returned to the National capital.

Luncheon to the President at the Piedmont Clubhouse followed the open-air speech at the fair grounds. The President had urged and almost forced Joel Chandler Harris, "Uncle Remus," to join him at the table, seating him at his right. John Temple Graves addressed the President, referring to him as "Georgiaa's most illustrious grandson," which Mr. Roosevelt received with a broad smile. Mr. Roosevelt spoke as follows:

"It must be almost unnecessary for me to say not alone how I have enjoyed today, but how deeply touched and moved I am at your reception of me—at Georgia's reception of its descendant. I told Gov. Terrell I had a kind of ancestral reversionary right to this chair, because the first Revolutionary President of Georgia was my great-great-grandfather, Archibald Bulloch, after whom one of my boys is named.

"No man could meet with such a reception as you have given me to-day; no man could see your city, could see your people, could address such an audience, as I have addressed and not be a better citizen afterward. It means a great deal to me to meet all of you personally with all that you gentlemen typify in the world of politics, the world of business, and that world of ethical effort, which can alone render either business or politics noble.

"Now, I am going to very ill repay the courtesy with which I have been greeted by causing for a minute or two acute discomfort to a man of whom I am very fond—Uncle Remus. Presidents may come and Presidents may go, but Uncle Remus stays put. Georgia has done a great many things for the Union, but she has never done more than when she gave Mr. Joel Chandler Harris to American literature.

"I suppose he is one of those literary people who insist that art should have nothing to do with morals, and will condemn me as a Philistine for not agreeing with them; but I want to say that one of the great reasons why I like what he has written is because after reading it I rise up with the purpoee of being a better man, a man who is bound to strive to do what is in him for the cause of decency and for the cause of righteousneas.

"Gentlemen, I feel too strongly to indulge in any language of mere compliment or mere flattery. Where Mr. Harris seems to me to have done one of his greatest services is that he has written what exalts the South in the mind of every man who reads it, and yet what has not even a flavor of bitterness toward any other part of the Union. There is not an American anywhere who can read Mr. Harris's stories—I am not speaking at the moment of his wonderful folk tales, but of his stories—who does not rise up a better citizen for having read them, who does not rise up with a more earnest desire to do his part in solving American problems a right.

"I cannot too strongly express the obligations I am under to Mr. Harris. One of those obligations is to feel as a principle that it is my duty, (which if I have transgressed I have not transgressed knowingly,) never as an American to say anything that could be construed into an attack upon any portion of our common country.

"The surest way of blunting the public conscience in dealing with corruption is to confuse the public mind as to who is corrupt and who is not. There are plenty of men with whom we differ radically, plenty of men of whom we radically disapprove, as to whom it is right and necessary that we should express that disapprobation; but beware of exressing it in terms that imply moral reprobation.

"When we express moral reprobation, let us be sure that we know the facts, and that we say only exactly what is true. To accuse an honest man of being a thief is to gladden the heart of every thief in the Nation. In our legislative bodies, in our National Congress, if you find that any man is corrupt you are not to be excused if you do not hunt him out of public life, whether he is of one party or whether he is of another. But if you accuse, either specifically or in loose general declamation, all men of being corruptionists, you have by just so much weakened your own strength when it becomes necessary to assail the genuine corruptionist.

"So far from asking that you be lenient in your judgment of any public man, I hold that you are recreant to your duty if you are thus lenient. Do not be lenient, but do be just. If you dislike a man's policy, say so. If you think he is acting in a way so misguided that he will bring ruin to the State or Nation, say so, but do not accuse him of corruption unless you know that he is corrupt, and if you know that he is corrupt, if you have good reason to believe that he is corrupt, then refuse under any plea of party expediency, under any consideration, from refraining from smiting him with the sword of the Lord and of Gideon."

During the repast the band stationed on the veranda played National airs, including "The Star Spangled Banner." As he recognized the familiar strains the President sprang to his feet, followed by all present, seemingly forgetful of his surroundings. As "Dixie" broke on the air, he waved his hand in time to the music and joined in the cheers.

A brief reception followed the luncheon, and then a visit was paid to the Georgia School of Technology. To the students the President said:

"President Matheson has introduced me as the first citizen of the world, but I am the first citizen in only so far as America is the first Nation of the world, and America can be the first Nation of the world only by just the kind of training and effort as is developed and symbolized in institutions of this kind.

"I believe in play. I believe you are all the better for it. Play just as hard as you know how, but when you quit, quit; then work with all your hearts and just as hard as you know how."

Next came a drive about the city under the escort of cavalry and the reception committee. It ended at the President's train, which pulled out for Jacksonville promptly at 7 o'clock this evening.

MACON, Ga., Oct. 20.—Three thousand people were assembled at the Southern Railway station here when President Roosevelt's special train arrived at 10 o'clock this evening. The President appeared on the rear platform of the train and spoke for five minutes.

"For the last three days," he said, "I have been greeted by the people of the old Confederate States and have found among them the same valor, devotion, and feeling to their country that they showed to their own flag from 1861 to 1865. I have found them all united."

He referred to Grant and Lee, and said that there was no rivalry now except in the interest of the common country.

The train started off again at 10:10.

BIG JUDGMENT REVERSED.

$1,100,000 Case Against Gen. Fitzgerald Is Ordered Retried.

By a vote of three to two, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in Kings reversed yesterday the judgment of $1,142,510 awarded a year ago to Morris C. Menges against Gen. Louis Fitzgerald, President of the Mercantile Trust Company and Director of the Equitable Life Assurance Society before its reorganization.

Justice Miller wrote the majority opinion, which was forty pages long, and Justice Rich wrote for himself and Justice Hirschberg a dissenting opinion covering thirty pages.

Mr. Menges, who is well known in Brooklyn, declared that Gen. Fitzgerald had agreed to pay him $1,000,000 for acting as the representative of a syndicate in the purchase of the Western Maryland Railroad. Mr. Menges asserted that because of information supplied by him the syndicate was enabled to buy the railroad property at a very low figure, and afterward sell it at a profit. The trial was in June, 1904, before Justice Spencer and a jury.

Justice Miller says in his opinion:

"I confess that after a most careful scrutiny of the charge I have been unable to detect the slightest resemblance between the cause of action submitted and the one alleged. In my judgment, the jury were misled by this charge [of the Presiding Justice] in respect to a vital point in the case."

The case will again be presented to a jury.

Old-Time Minstrel Dead.

"Cool" Burgess, the well-known minstrel, died yesterday morning in the General Hospital at Toronto, where he had been for several months. He was about sixty years old, and a native of Toronto. Burgess was a Canadian favorite in his time, and toured Canada at the head of his own company. He was popular in the United States, appearing with Primrose and West and other minstrel troupes. He was the original singer of "Nicodemus Johnson," and the first "long shoe" dancer.

THE PRESIDENT VISITS HIS MOTHER'S OLD HOME

Tenderly Recalls Incidents of Her Childhood at Roswell.

LOATH TO LEAVE THE PLACE

Reminds the Townspeople That Two of His Uncles Were Officers in the Confederate Navy.

ROSWELL, Ga., Oct. 20.—President Roosevelt to-day carried out his long-cherished plan of visiting this town, the home of his mother. One of his reasons for coming South was that he might see the old homestead where his mother spent her girlhood and which she left a happy bride.

That the visit was fraught with many tender recollections was evident, and as his carriage drove away from the old Bulloch mansion, where his mother lived and married, the President murmured to Mrs. Roosevelt: "I can hardly bear to leave here."

The President reached Roswell at 7:30 o'clock this morning, and was joined by Senator and Mrs. Clay, who were his guests at breakfast. He then entered a carriage and was driven to the mansion. This fine homestead is now the property of J. B. Wing, a lumber merchant, who lives in it with his sister, Mrs. Wood, the Postmaster of Roswell.

Here he was greeted by two old servants who lived on the place during his mother's young womanhood. One of these is "Aunt Grace," who acted as maid to Miss Martha Bulloch, who afterward became Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, and the other is William Jackson, who decorated the mansion on the occasion of the marriage of its young mistress. The President was deeply touched as he shook the hands of these old servitors.

In company with Mrs. Roosevelt he then inspected the house, recalling for the benefit of the company many incidents connected with his mother's childhood. Before leaving the mansion he posed with Mrs. Roosevelt for a picture, which included "Aunt Grace" and "Daddy William."

From the homestead the President was driven to the town park, where a stand had been erected from which he delivered an address. Senator A. S. Clay introduced him, and he was enthusiastically greeted as he rose to speak. He said:

"Senator, and you, my friends, whom it is hard for me not to call my neighbors, for I feel as if you were:

"You can have no idea of how much it means to me to come back to Roswell, to the home of my mother and my mother's people, and to see the spot which I already knew so well from what my mother and my aunts told me. It has been exactly as if I were revisiting some old place of my childhood.

Lauds Senator Clay.

"It has meant very much to me to be introduced by Senator Clay. Senator Clay has been altogether too kind in what he said about me. Now I am going to say nothing whatever but the bare facts about Senator Clay, and those facts amount to this: If the average man I had to deal with in public life possessed Senator Clay's firm devotion to what he deems right, my task would be so easy that it would not be worth mentioning. I have gone to Senator Clay for advice and counsel and help ever since I have been in Washington, just as I went to Senator Cockrell of Missouri while he was in the Senate, with the certainty that all I had to do was to convince him that what I wanted done was right—I could not always convince him—but if I did convince him that was the end of it—he went that way.

"Oh, my friends, I hardly like to say how deeply my heart is moved by coming back here among you. Among the earliest recollections I have as a child is learning from my mother and my aunt, Miss Annie Bulloch, as she was then, about Roswell; of how the Pratts and Kings and Dunwoodys and Bullochs came here first to settle; about the old homestead, the house on the hill; about the Chattahoochee; about all kinds and sorts of incidents that would not interest you, but interested me a great deal when I was a child.

"I wish I could spend hours here to look all through and see the different places about which I have heard all kinds of incidents. All those anecdotes, looking back now, I can see, taught me an enormous amount, perhaps all the more because they were not intended to teach anything. I think, perhaps, we are very apt to learn most when neither we nor the people talking to us intend to teach us anything. If anybody starts in to teach us something we are a little apt to resent it and assume a rather repellent attitude.

"All those stories of the life of those days taught me what a real home life, a real neighbor life, was and should be. Looking back now at what I learned through the stories of the childhood of my mother, my aunts, my uncles, I understand why the boys and girls of Roswell of that time grew up to be men and women who were good servants of the community, who were good husbands, good fathers, good wives and mothers, how it was that they learned to do their duty aright in peace and in war also.

His Southern Relations.

"It has been my very great good fortune to have the right to claim that my blood is half Southern and half Northern, and I would deny the right of any man here to feel a greater pride in the deeds of every Southerner than I feel. Of the children, the brothers and sisters of my mother who were born and brought up in that house on the hill there, my two uncles afterward entered the Confederate service and served in the Confederate Navy.

"One, the younger man, served on the Alabama as the youngest officer aboard her. He was Captain of one of her broadside thirty-two-pounders in her final fight, and when at the very end the Alabama was sinking and the Kearsarge passed under her stern and came up along the side that had not been engaged hitherto, my uncle, Irving Bulloch, shifted his gun from one side to the other and fired the last two shots fired from the Alabama.

"James Dunwoody Bulloch was an Admiral in the Confederate service. Of all the people whom I have ever met, he was the one that came nearest to that beautiful creation of Thackeray—'Colonel Newcome.'

"Men and women, don't you think that I have the ancestral right to claim a proud kinship with those who showed their devotion to duty as they saw the duty, whether they wore the blue? All Americans who are worthy of the name feel an equal pride in the valor of those who fought on one side or the other, provided only that each did with all his might and soul and mind his duty as it was given him to see his duty."

The President next was driven to the old Presbyterian Church, in which his grandfather, James Bulloch, was once a leading member. Mr. Bulloch dropped dead in this church while teaching a Sunday school class, in 1849, and among those present in the church to-day were three members of that class who were present at the time. The venerable pastor of the church, the Rev. Dr. W. E. Baker, offered prayer, and the President and Mrs. Roosevelt then shook hands with a number of the townspeople, many of whom had known the President's mother.

In the escort which conducted the President from the train to the different points he visited was Warren E. Crockett, who was a member of Col. Roosevelt's regiment during the Spanish war.

The reception of the President at the old home of his mother was a cordial one. The people greeted him both as President and as the son of one of their neighbors. Many were the kind references to his mother from those who knew her, and many were the expressions of good-will toward her son.

THE PRESIDENT'S SQUARE DEAL.

A large part of Mr. ROOSEVELT'S speech at Charlotte, N. C., on Thursday was devoted to his latest plan of railroad regulation. Clearly he is very much in love with it at present, and there is every sign that he intends to press it on Congress with all the influence he can bring to bear. It is fair to infer that he thinks the sentiment he may awaken in the South will strengthen that influence, and he is doing his best to awaken it. With entire respect to him, we venture to say that he appeals much more emphatically to sentiment than to reflection and judgment.

The lines of his address are very simple. The railroads are essential to our prosperity. They cannot be thrown open to all as the old highways are, and they cannot be possessed by the Government. Left to their present owners they will be used selfishly and unfairly. Therefore the Government must take in hand the regulation of them. This involves the regulation of the rates charged. The courts cannot attend to that. Let us have an administrative board to do it. And since delay of justice is in effect denial of justice, give to this board the power to fix rates which shall go into effect practically immediately, and remain in force until the courts have decided that they are unjust rates. Mr. ROOSEVELT admits that this would be a tremendous power and should be exercised with entire impartiality. He says:

> It must be understood as a matter of course that if this power is granted it is to be exercised with wisdom and caution and self-restraint. The Inter-State Commerce Commissioner or other Government official who failed to protect a railroad that was in the right against any clamor, no matter how violent, on the part of the public would be guilty of as gross a wrong as if he corruptly rendered an improper service to the railroad at the expense of the public. When I say square deal I mean a square deal; exactly as much a square deal for the rich man as for the poor man, but no more. Let each stand on his merits, receive what is due him, and be judged according to his deserts. To more he is not entitled, and less he shall not have.

Two things are to be noted as to this wide extension of administrative powers. One is that there has never been in the history of administration a commission that has exercised such complex and delicate and difficult powers with success. It will be seen that it is quite a different thing here proposed from the management of Government railroads, where the whole business is in the hands of officials and the Treasury pays the deficits. The President's commission would be called on to take up at any time any complaint arising in our vast territory in the network of roads serving millions of shippers. On that complaint they would act as best they could, and the effect might and often would extend to wide areas as to which they had and could have no adequate information. Such a commission would require something besides fair minds, "wisdom, caution, and self-restraint." It would require more executive ability in the railroad business than was ever granted by Heaven to any board, bureau, or department of the United States Government.

The second thing suggested by this proposition is that the usual rules of procedure sanctioned by ages of experience in matters of disputed justice are reversed. The railroad companies are subject to certain laws which they are to be supposed to obey unless they can be shown to have disobeyed them. The President asks that a purely administrative body, appointed by him, shall inquire as to any complaint of disobedience of law, shall decide if they find it sustained, shall impose what may be a serious penalty, and that that penalty shall be enforced unless and until reviewed and condemned by the courts. Then, if the courts do condemn it, the old rate may be restored, but the roads lose the difference for the time in which the new rate has been enforced. Anything more utterly arbitrary cannot be imagined. It is not rendered less arbitrary by calling it a "square deal" or by insisting that it is a "square deal." Nor will the plaudits of any number of thousands of people gathered around the speaking stands in the President's tour change its real character.

MAYOR M'CLELLAN'S POSITION.

It was high time that somebody spoke a sane word about municipal ownership. Mayor MCCLELLAN has spoken it. In his speech on Thursday evening he gave a rational exposition of the principles which should determine the city's policy in respect to franchises. A public franchise is a part of the wealth of the people; it is a form of property which, like any other property, should be made a source of profit or gain, if possible. The question whether wealth in the form of franchises will earn more money if put to use by the city itself than it would if leased or granted for compensation to a private operator is purely a business matter. There is no issue of natural right or wrong, or morals, or of religion involved. It would be as foolish for the city to let the objections of present franchise holders prevent a change of policy as it would be to permit itself to be rushed into Socialistic experiments by the howling of demagogues. Indeed, as Mayor McCLELLAN says, the extreme demagogic agitators for full municipal ownership and operation are enemies to the principle of public control of franchises as dangerous as the advocates of grants in perpetuity.

Private interest is a disqualification in a public counselor, and a person who takes up the issue of municipal ownership as a means of advertising his business is no more worthy of attention than the holder of a gratuitous and perpetual franchise who opposes agitation because it would interfere with his profits. "The question of municipal control is purely one of dollars and cents," said Mayor MCCLELLAN. "It is only a question of business, and not all the demagogues and charlatans in Christendom can make it otherwise."

There is an underlying principle to which Mr. MCCLELLAN alluded that should always be kept in view. It is the principle that the field of private enterprise should not be invaded by the municipality so long as the public is reasonably well served by private effort. That principle is of course unacceptable to the Socialists. It is one of which the taxpayer should take account, however, because these ventures to which ignorant agitation would commit us at once will be enormously costly. To that element of the problem the Mayor very properly calls attention. The city is committed to rapid transit extension. It must soon spend many millions for additional pure water supply. When some of these urgent needs have been met it will be time to talk of municipal trading ventures, if by that time the people have not become disgusted with the whole Socialistic propaganda.

That part of the community that has already been made apprehensive by the clamor of municipal ownership agitators—and it is by far the majority part—has good reason to congratulate itself that a man so well-poised and sensible as GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN is running for the office of Mayor this Fall.

STONEWALL JACKSON'S WIDOW.

"I like your King EDWARD," RUDYARD KIPLING makes one of his American characters declare: "he's so blamed British." We like our President, some of us may say, who by no means approve all his public performances, because he's so blamed American. Perhaps, in either case, the true statement would be because he is so very human. Certainly the President's facility for doing human things in a human way is one of the chief sources of his popularity. He can say with perfect truth that nothing human is foreign to him, whether he knows anything about it or not. His present "swinging round the circle" seems to promise even a greater extension of his popularity than any of its predecessors. His "progress" through Virginia seems to have had the effect of destroying any opposition to him that lurked in the Old Dominion. And he captured North Carolina in his thirty minutes at Charlotte. In that space of time he managed to refer to the Mecklenburg declaration of independence, one of the proudest of the memories of all "tar heels." But of course his chief triumph was what he said to the widow of STONEWALL JACKSON about her husband and her grandson, whom he has just appointed to West Point, and his insistence upon introducing her to Mrs. ROOSEVELT. This might have been the policy of a demagogic politician. The President's advantage is that in his case nobody imputes these things to anything but human impulses. The bitter cry of the Democratic politician in Texas may well be echoed by the Democratic politicians of the Southern States through which the President is now passing: "You get that man out of here, or there won't be a Democratic vote left in the State."

TRAFALGAR DAY.

The centenary of the battle of Trafalgar will to-day be celebrated in England with the utmost enthusiasm, and by the best of titles. Of all the battles which Great Britain has fought, by land or sea, that great sea fight is the one which is adapted to evoke the greatest popular sympathy. It was, doubtless, one of the "decisive battles of the world." Capt. MAHAN has taught this generation to perceive the enormous influence of "sea power" upon operations on land, and has shown what a decisive coercion NELSON put upon NAPOLEON. Moreover, the British Navy has always been more popular than the British Army, which is to some extent the case with American appreciation of the two services. The centenary of Waterloo ten years hence will recall the final overthrow of NAPOLEON. But Waterloo is far from being so popular a victory as Trafalgar. The proportion of British troops under WELLINGTON'S command was so small that the victory was not by any means national. While the English "man in the street" may not be aware of this, he is at least aware that NELSON was a much more eligible, because a much more democratic, popular hero than the "Iron Duke," who in truth has been a hero pretty exclusively of the British privileged classes. That lofty aristocrat once declared, "Before all things, I am an English gentleman." NELSON would never have said that, was not, indeed, entitled to say it. He would have maintained with much vehemence that he was a man, as good as the next and better than any possible Frenchman. And such a democratic declaration would have endeared him the more to his countrymen, who were, in fact, all the more endeared to him by the humanity even of his very human frailties.

And, moreover, there is a special reason for the enthusiastic celebration of the centenary of Trafalgar. The "sovereignty of the seas" which NELSON'S victory seemed to render complete has now been loudly challenged. The British Navy may still be kept at the "two power" or even the "three power standard." But the British mercantile marine, which in the days of wood and canvas the American mercantile marine pushed with an urgent competition, in these days of steel and steam the German mercantile marine is pushing with an even more threatening rivalry. There is thus in the celebration of Trafalgar that element of hostility and defiance that is needed to bring out the enthusiasm of a great nation.

TO MAKE AUTOMOBILE RACING USEFUL.

It is related of a certain Shah that he was shockingly bored at the Derby when he was visiting England. In response to his host's amazed inquiry why this was so, the Shah replied: "It was already known to me that one horse can run faster than another." Substantially the same reply is involved in the intimation that the Automobile Club of France is indisposed to accept the custody of the Vanderbilt Cup, since it does not care to take the responsibility of the next race. The state of the automobile art has so far advanced in France that speed racing between racers is no longer useful there. If racing between racing cars is to be continued in the United States, it will imply that we are so backward that such contests have still a use here that they have outlived abroad.

There is here a plain hint that soon if not now automobile racing will be in a condition like yacht racing. Queen's Cup models have lost their interest except for Queen's Cup races, and these are increasingly difficult to arrange. Instead there is brisk rivalry in single-handed cruisers and wholesome boats which shall place their skippers on an equality by identity of design and construction. Automobile racing is now ripening in the same direction. Very few prospective owners are interested in 100-horse-power cars, or wish to tour over ordinary roads at railway speed. The best performers at stipulated horse powers, record-making by really stock cars under amateur driving, competitions under ordinary conditions, rivalries in comfort and convenience, are what will interest buyers, even though they lack the dramatic qualities of races where it is hoped or feared that a catastrophe may be assisted by witnessing it at a safe distance. France gives the tip that common sense qualities rather than uncommon speed capacity are to be the fashion in the most advanced automobile world hereafter.

THE IRVING FUNERAL.

For the second time in British history the British pantheon of the Abbey has been opened to an actor. Since GARRICK was buried in the Abbey a century and a quarter ago, doubtless the art of acting has advanced far nearer to the standing of a "profession" than it did in his time. GARRICK had a much more inveterate prejudice to contend against than his successor. GEORGE III. would certainly never have consented to bestow upon his name the "handle" which his granddaughter was graciously pleased to append to IRVING'S, and there must have been a far greater opposition to overcome to the burial in the Abbey in 1779 than there has been in 1905. The greater credit is therefore and by so much due to GARRICK. His lifelong friend, JOHNSON, who said publicly that his death had "eclipsed the gayety of nations and impoverished the public stock of harmless pleasure," gave the true explanation of the striking exception that was made in his favor by saying in private that "his profession had made him rich and he had made it respectable." The combination of riches and respectability has never failed to appeal to the British public or to the British Government.

There have been famous British actors and managers between GARRICK and IRVING. But none has achieved this combination, none of the Kembles or of the Keans, not even MACREADY, who came nearest to it, in such measure as to give him a colorable title to this particular form of British honor. Even seventy years ago or thereabout, it was permissible for CARLYLE to say that the only readable biographies in English were those of actors, because "in the nature of the case, they had given respectability the go-by." To be sure, CARLYLE was a Scottish peasant, with the prejudices of his early environment added to the recognized British stock of prejudices. To be sure, also, the calling of an actor is nowhere in the world of itself a voucher or credential of respectability, even at this present date. There are still exceptional barriers to be broken down in order that an actor may be recognized as one of the glories of his country in which it is entitled to take pride. All the more honor to Sir HENRY IRVING, who managed to break those special barriers down.

MISS ROOSEVELT'S PRESENTS.

If the Congress were to pass a special bill relieving from payment of import duties the gifts received by the daughter of the President during her recent trip, we do not believe that there would be a score of Americans who would object. But there are difficulties in the way of this disposition of the matter.

One is that such a bill in its progress through the two houses, while its essential purpose would be accepted as good, would probably and not unreasonably arouse a debate as to the extremely foolish law under which duties are required in such cases. That is an experience that the friends and beneficiaries of the tariff wish at all costs to avoid if it be possible. And in this instance it is obvious that the inconvenience and absurdity of fining the President for courtesies shown to his daughter, not on her or his personal account, but wholly on account of his official position, are only the natural consequence of the excessive animosity toward foreign goods which lies at the bottom of the tariff laws. Another difficulty is in the fact that Mr. ROOSEVELT, with characteristic directness, has declared that he would pay the duties as any other citizen would, and he might be embarrassed by having submitted for his signature a measure of this sort. Meanwhile the ridiculous aspect of the matter may turn attention to the real cause of it. We hope that it will.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Freedom Rashly Impugned.

That truth is not absolute, but merely a matter of time and place, is a fact that was well illustrated when Mr. JEROME, addressing an east side audience in Clinton Hall, told them, with all the large energy and vivacity at his command, that they were the residents of a boss-ridden city in which "freedom" was an ironic word and nothing else. "You talk about Russia," he said, "and not a few in this part of the city have come from the cruel rule of a despotic Government to this country looking for freedom and peace. Peace you may have, but have you got freedom? What is your will? How has a single man in this audience before me expressed his will? Has any one of you had a voice in determining who the candidate should be, except those of you who have signed my petition? Is there a single man here to-night in this audience who has had a voice in saying whether ODELL of Newburg or MURPHY of Good Ground should dictate who should rule this fair city? And you call that freedom!" Of course that was all accurate in a way, and it was admirable doctrine to preach in other parts of New York, where the way of the accuracy would be understood, but it is greatly to be feared that on the east side it will tend somewhat to give, and much more to confirm, false and extremely dangerous ideas as to the real nature of the municipal evils with which the city is contending. New York is boss-ridden and it is not; its citizens rule themselves and they do not. Somewhere between these contradictions lies the fact that a city which need submit to exploitation or deprivation of its rights no single moment longer than it likes—a city that has in its hands a thousand times more power than would be required to remedy all its wrongs—is as free as any aggregation of human beings ever was or ever can hope to be. The same exhortation that may move one group to a legitimate exercise of legitimate energy may stir another, sometimes to despair and sometimes to a wholly unnecessary and futile struggle against inevitable restrictions. Too many of our newly arrived immigrants come here with false expectations as to the quality of our freedom, and, when the expectations are not realized, they are far too ready to proclaim that the vaunted liberties of America are farcical names for a despotism not essentially different from that from which they have escaped. When a man like Mr. JEROME tells them that we have no freedom, though he only means that we occasionally fail for longer or shorter periods to exercise our freedom, it is terribly apt to make a bad matter worse instead of better.

An Appeal for Kindness.

It strikes us that the Rev. CHARLES A. EATON, pastor of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, in Cleveland, should be well back among the last to make sarcastic remarks about a "Rockefelleritis" from which he thinks some of his fellow-countrymen are suffering. In the first place, the word doesn't mean what Mr. EATON apparently thinks it means, for, strictly speaking, nobody can have "Rockefelleritis," that is, an inflammation of the Rockefeller, except Mr. ROCKEFELLER himself, and presumably Mr. EATON didn't intend to assert that the most eminent of his parishioners is thus affected. What he did intend, we presume, was to declare that some of us are prejudiced against Mr. ROCKEFELLER, criticise his character unjustly, make false charges in reference to his business methods, and do not give to his domestic and parochial virtues the importance which Mr. EATON thinks they deserve. He may be right, more or less, but he should be—well, cautious. For, as our, meaning the public's, judgment of Mr. ROCKEFELLER may be distorted by seeing that gigantic figure from a standpoint whence it looms sinister and portentous, so Mr. EATON'S may be twisted another way because he never gets a glimpse of that side, but looks always at gentler aspects. We will not, as some might, lay emphasis on the possibility that Mr. EATON'S admiration may be a form of—gratitude warmed by expectation. The possibility exists, however, and the fear of giving pain is not everywhere as strongly developed as it is in this particularly suave and kindly column. Why cannot the reverend gentleman be charitable enough to admit the chance that the Rockefeller shield has two sides, and, while himself contentedly basking in the silver radiance of one of them, permit the rest of us, upon whom it has never been turned, to shiver in the black gloom of the other? Mr. ROCKEFELLER seems to be fairly happy, and he is not without compensations for such stings as the criticism of press and public may inflict. He has, for instance, the praise, evidently as sincere as it is hearty, of his pastor; the children in several Sunday schools hear him with docility, his wig fits well, and if he ever lacks carfare he is not likely to have much trouble in borrowing it. So why defend him so vehemently?

A Fine Myth, but No Mystery.

Mr. EDWARD GEORGE CUNLIFFE is remarkable among criminals not only because he has somehow moved many newspapers to print all three of his names in full, but because he has an imagination and did his best to raise his theft of $101,000 from an express company out of the domain of grand larceny into that of psychology. It was a very pretty story he told about a sudden and inexplicable impulse that made him seize one out of many money packages and fly from his happy home, conscience-stricken, regretful, unhappy, but helpless. Any alienist would have accepted the tale as illustrating the mysterious possibilities of the human mind when the, or a, subliminal self takes control of the more obvious ego, and the robber might easily have become an object of even more interest in scientific than in criminal court circles if the story had been let alone. But it wasn't. The detectives, who are little accustomed to doing business with subliminal selves, applied their brutal tests to the artistic production of Mr. EDWARD GEORGE CUNLIFFE, and, by discovering that his exile, whatever else it might have been, was mitigated by feminine companionship, reduced the mysterious to the commonplace in short order. The story remains, but the facts are against it, and the commonplace and familiar rush up and overwhelm its apparent strangeness. The old temptation still works, and how tired ADAM must be of watching the repetition of his own experiences!

SOCIALISTS AGAINST HEARST.

Declared to be No Sentiment for Him In Socialistic Circles.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am tolerably well informed as to what goes on in Socialist circles, and I can say positively that no Socialist organization in Brooklyn or elsewhere in the city has "come near being disrupted" over Mr. Hearst and his league, or has had any trouble whatever over him. Last Saturday evening at the meeting of the Kings County Committee of the Socialist Party a committee came from Mr. Hearst asking us please to indorse him. They got their answer in short order and in such plain terms that they sat in open-mouthed wonder at these wicked Socialists, who have no reverence for a political Moses with a "barrel." The question was discussed, but the discussion was all on one side. All the delegates wanted the floor at once to tell the Hearst committee that our rule is "No compromise, no political trading"; that we of the Socialist Party neither give nor accept indorsements; that we have no more respect for a millionaire "radical" than for a millionaire conservative. As the Irish Socialists say: "The great appear great to us because we are on our knees; let us arise." We have arisen.

The Socialist Party is against Hearst—and, so far as I am informed, unanimously against him—because he does not stand for Socialism or half-Socialism or quarter-Socialism or anything approaching Socialism, but just for capitalism under a new name. And capitalism by any other name would smell as bad.

ALGERNON LEE.

New York, Oct. 20, 1905.

Good Bosses in Demand.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Is it right to have a leader, or what is termed a boss, in politics? An army requires a General; a large body of working men require a boss. The General and the boss should be capable of filling the position. A boss in politics is all well enough providing he is just the right kind of a man, and one who is actuated by the best motives. If he is willing to sacrifice the public interests for the sake of his friends, or to down faithful public officers, he is a bad boss and will come to grief. We need bosses like Washington, Lincoln, Grant, and Sherman, but deliver us from some of the modern type.

SAUGATUCK.

Word for the Mayor.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. George Haven Putnam does the Mayor an injustice in the following extract from his letter that you print this morning: "An administration which is responsible, however, for such heads of departments as Hopper, Oakley, and Pallas—." Surely he ought to know that Mr. Hopper holds his appointment from the Borough President, not from the Mayor. The Mayor has enough bad appointments to answer for, anyhow.

Breathing Motor-Car Dust.

Prof. Thomas Oliver of Newcastle-on-Tyne, in delivering the first of the Harben lectures at the Royal Institute of Public Health, London, Oct. 7, spoke on wood-paving dust as responsible for much pneumonia. The dust-raising properties of motor cars, too, had created a condition of affairs which, if unattended to, might be followed by consequences prejudicial not only to the individual but to the climate of our country. The dust that was raised by wheel traffic carried into the atmosphere germs of every description, and they often remained in suspension for a considerable period. The presence of dust and smoke in the atmosphere often assisted in the formation of fogs and mist, and some authorities asserted that our country received less sunshine nowadays than was the case years ago, when the atmosphere was clearer. It was said that the climate of England was becoming deteriorated and the beauty of the landscape destroyed and the productiveness of the earth decreased, owing to the loss of sunshine, which played so important a part in the life.

A Record Summer for Tips.

From The London Telegraph.

PARIS, Oct. 9.—Last Summer has been a record one in Paris for tips. The inference is that more tourists come here than ever before. The porters in all the Paris museums say that they have never had such a prosperous season. They made more out of visitors whose umbrellas and sticks they took charge of than even during the World's Fair of 1900. At the Pantheon tourists who went to see the graves of France's illustrious dead brought in as much as £1 4s daily in tips of pennies or two-pences to the attendants.

Chance for Wilde's Creditors.

From The London Pall Mall Gazette.

In Paris, where the French translation of the late Oscar Wilde's "De Profundis" has found an extensive sale, it is thought to be not unlikely that things will happen over the vernacular version. The sale profits of the version, it is stated, amount, so far, to between £800 and £900. This sum is claimed by the Official Receiver in Bankruptcy for the benefit of the English creditors of the author.

From Canada.

From The Montreal Gazette.

United States army engineers have reported that, for an outlay of from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000, a fourteen-foot waterway can be provided from Chicago to St. Louis. This is not a large sum to spend on connecting two such systems of navigation as those of the Mississippi and the great lakes. It may be practicable to go by fresh water from Montreal to New Orleans yet.

English Up to Date.

From The Detroit Free Press.

As she is spoken to-day, to accomplish a great deal is the same as to do a good many.

Is mighty hard to beat;

JEROME WAVE GROWING.

Candidate's Independence Wins Plaudits—Here Are a Few of Many.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am delighted to compliment you upon the Jerome editorial in THE TIMES this morning. What would be the lesson of Jerome's defeat? It would be that every young man who has within him natural instincts of honesty, courage, and a disposition to do the right thing in public and private life must suppress them if he is to succeed n public life; that success can only be had through training in with the grafters and the unscrupulous.

REPUBLICAN.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Oct. 20, 1905.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

To beat Jerome! For this Tammany Hall flattered the Bar Association by the renomination of good Judges whom it hated. For this a mouse trap was set for Hughes. For this the foulest of skill is at work building up false issues for the voters to split on!

C.

New York, Oct. 20, 1905.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Does anybody doubt that if the people are to be waked up to a sense of public welfare—and let us hope they can be this year—there will be any improbability about Mr. Jerome's election? Preach to the voters the necessity for splitting their ballots, an all too prevalent matter of trivial disinclination, and with what Jerome will say and do between now and election there should be no reason to worry about his continuance in the District Attorney's office. I know a Tammany man who will vote for Jerome, for good and sufficient reasons, and I hope there are others, notwithstanding the course mapped out by the organization leaders.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The registered voter has it in his power—and I believe he will use it—to vindicate his personal rights and break down one-man rule. If each man who believes as I do will make one convert (Republican, Democrat, or Hearst man) for Jerome the trick is done! Concentrate your fire, pick your man, and "mesmerize" your voter on election day to vote for Jerome and against bossism. Try it. Work for it.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will THE TIMES agitate the question of a business men's parade in behalf of Mr. Jerome? If other trades feel as do the dry goods men such a movement would meet with enthusiastic support. Never before have I heard such unanimity in this district in support of a candidate. On every hand men speak of Jerome with genuine admiration and express their desire to assist him in every way possible. They would hail with delight an opportunity to make a demonstration that will make political history.

CATCHING WOLVES ALIVE.

Mr. Roosevelt Tells How Abernethy, the Hunter Does It with His Hands.

Theodore Roosevelt in the November Scribner's.

In a couple of miles I was close enough to see what was going on. But one greyhound was left with Abernethy. The coyote was obviously tired, and Abernethy, with the aid of his perfectly trained horse, was helping the greyhound catch it. Twice he headed it, and this enabled me to gain rapidly. They had reached a small unwooded creek by the time I was within fifty yards; the little wolf tried to break back to the left; Abernethy headed it and rode almost over it; and it gave a wicked snap at his foot, cutting the boot. Then he wheeled and came toward it; again it galloped back, and just as it crossed the creek the greyhound made a rush, pinned it by the hind leg and threw it. There was a scuffle, then a yell from the greyhound as the wolf bit it. At the bite the hound let go and jumped back a few feet, and at the same moment Abernethy, who had ridden his horse right on them as they struggled, leaped off and sprang on top of the wolf. He held the reins of the horse with one hand and thrust the other, with a rapidity and precision even greater than the rapidity of the wolf's snap, into the wolf's mouth, jamming his hand down crosswise between the jaws, seizing the lower jaw and bending it down so that the wolf could not bite him. He had a stout glove on his hand, but this would have been of no avail whatever had he not seized the animal just as he did; that is, behind the canines, while his hand pressed the lips against the teeth; with his knees he kept the wolf from using its fore paws to break the hold, until it gave up struggling. When he thus leaped on and captured this coyote it was entirely free, the dog having let go of it; and he was obliged to keep hold of the reins of his horse with one hand. I was not twenty yards distant at the time, and as I leaped off the horse he was sitting placidly on the live wolf, his hand between its jaws, the greyhound standing beside him, and his horse standing by as placid as he was. In a couple of minutes Fortescue and Lambert came up. It was as remarkable a feat of the kind as I have ever seen.

Wanted, a Health Camp's Address.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to learn where, in the South or Southwest, a young man suffering from tuberculosis can get board in a "health camp" or out-of-door sanitarium and at a moderate cost. I am sure that some of your readers who may have suffered from this disease, or who have friends thus afflicted, can give me the information I am looking for. Or perhaps some of them know of a place where this patient could put up a tent and at the same time secure board from the owner of the land. The patient is a refined, intelligent man of good habits and standing. I shall be more than grateful to any one who will take the trouble to write in reply to this.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

One of the peculiar effects arising from the manner of giving numbers over the telephone is the adoption by lawyers of the same style in referring to numbers of sections, &c., while addressing the court. Thus to-day in calling the attention of the Justice to "Sections 2,044 to 2,046 of the Code," counsel actually said: "Sections two-o-four-four to two-o-four-six."

IS ETHER MATERIAL?

An Argument Against Prof. Dolbear's Contention in the Negative.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Prof. A. E. Dolbear's interesting article on the ether in your issue of Sunday, Oct. 15, contains arguments in support of the view that ether is not a form of matter. As is well known, a difference of opinion exists upon this subject, and Prof. Dolbear is one of the very few eminent scientists who still advocate the non-materiality of the ether. It may be well to glance at some arguments on the other side of the question.

First—It is held that all particles of matter gravitate. No such phenomenon is seen in the ether, therefore ether is not matter.

Reply—Gravitation does not affect all matter equally. Atoms of hydrogen gas refuse to be attracted and fly off into space. But no one thinks of claiming that because of this fact hydrogen is not matter. The less the density, the less the gravity. Ether has the least density of any substance known. It does not reflect upon its materiality to say that the gravitation effect is imperceptible in it; this is as it should be. In fact, it is a much harder matter to show how, and with what, the ether could gravitate.

Second—It is held that the ether is a continuous body, not composed of particles, or atoms, as matter is.

Reply—The continuity of the ether is denied. Light is a form of wave moving through the ether. In order that such motion may exist, there must be particles that can be moved. The argument that a continuous medium is incapable of sustaining motion is given at length in Stallo's Modern Physics, Ch. iv. The fact that the ether does sustain motion is evidence of its discontinuity and reason for regarding it as a form of matter.

Third—Ether possesses a high degree of elasticity, great rigidity, and very small density. These prove it to be a very attenuated form of matter indeed, but still matter. We only know matter by its properties. Whatever possesses any properties of matter must be called matter.

Fourth—It is claimed that the ether is frictionless; because no effects of friction are observed in the passage through it of heavenly bodies. This, again, is as it should be. Helmholtz ("On the Origin of the Planetary System") says: "In like manner, the medium which fills space is far too attenuated for any diminution to have been perceived in the motion of the planets since the time in which we possess astronomical observations of their paths." But this is not true in the case of smaller bodies. We have evidence that the movement of the ether particles themselves is attended by friction, i. e., in the propagation of light. "Thus the light of stars of the first magnitude does not lose as much as 1 per cent.; but, on the other hand, stars of the ninth magnitude are enfeebled to the extent of about 30 per cent." (Stewart and Tait: "The Unseen Universe," Ch. iv.) This loss of light from the more distant stars is due to friction of the ether particles in transmitting it.

In his Sunday article Prof. Dolbear omits one important consideration, which, however, he discusses in his book, "Modes of Motion." Ether possesses inertia. If it did not, light would instantly diffuse through all space. But as the light-energy must first overcome the inertia of the ether it occupies a finite time in its passage. Some physicists are inclined to regard the possession of inertia as the only test of materiality. A. P. Gage says: "It is the sole unalterable property of matter."

Finally there is the fact proved experimentally by Prof. Lebedew and others in 1901 that light exerts a mechanical pressure. Here we find the ether pressing upon all things with exactly the strength that its extreme tenuity of mass requires. That which tips our balances can surely be none other than matter.

Like all other matter, ether is perceptible to the human sense. The eye is our ether-perceiving organ. When we look aloft and see the heavens dotted with points of light it is not vibrating air that we see, it is the quivering ether in contact with our optic nerve. If we could not see or hear or feel the ether we could not know it, for only the perceptible may be known.

For several mornings I have looked for a protest against your most unfair depreciation of the purchasing power of a cent. I inclose a list of just a few articles that can be bought for 1 cent, but venture not to believe that these are all: Two rolls, 1 cent; a box of pins, 1 cent; several pink evening papers, 1 cent; a stick of candy, 1 cent; 5 gum drops, 1 cent; 1 pencil, 1 cent; 1 pen, 1 cent; 1 rubber, 1 cent; a knitting needle, 1 cent. There was until quite recently a one-cent shop on the west side expressly for the public school children.

MILLENNIAL DAWN.

Oh, haste! oh, haste! the happy day
When women to the polls may go,
And in an understanding way
Bring those reforms we're sure to know—
When women vote.

Temptation grows e'en now alarmed,
Lest it be forced to swiftly flee
From paths of men, and hide, disarmed,
In darksome caves or depths of sea—
When women vote.

So plain that he who runs may read
Becomes the situation;
Less strenuous the life we'll lead,
Through all this busy Nation—
When women vote.

Our food, perhaps, will come unsought,
As manna did in days of old,
And we shall give no care or thought
To raiment, or a thirst for gold—
When women vote.

And seals will awim in all the seas,
And come at proper times to shore,
To shed their skins with perfect ease,
And go away to grow some more—
When women vote.

"SCREAMLAND," A SKIT AT TEACHERS COLLEGE

FIGHT FIRE WITH ATOMIZERS

They Bump-the-Bumps, Shoot Canvas Chutes, Play Clown, and Flourish Tomahawks Like Real Squaws.

The future instructors of New York's young idea had the time of their lives last evening, when the girls of Teachers' College invited the public to visit "Screamland" and gave a lively travesty of Coney Island's Dreamland. It took place in the gymnasium of the Thompson Memorial Building, on 120th Street, near the college, for the benefit of the Students' Executive Council, and no one who was not present would believe all the exciting things those staid young women did.

They bumped the bumps down a spiral stairway; they shot the chutes down a canvas slide from the balcony to the main floor of the "gym" until Billy Sewall—a mere man who was present—shot straight through the canvas and made a big hole in the centre; they fought the flames with atomizers, wearing rubber coats and firemen's hats; as squaws, wearing feather headdresses, they swung tomahawks and gave Indian war whoops in ladylike voices, and—some of them were so shocked that they wore masks—there were clowns with bifurcated garments.

There were more clowns than anything else, it seemed.

"If any of my scholars should see me like this I'd sink through the floor," said one pretty clown in white, looking down with a complacent air at the neat little ruffles which encircled her ankles.

"We do not tell the names of any of the clowns," said an officer of "Screamland" with dignity, but then every one knew that Miss Flora Cutting was the jolly little red clown, and the pretty blue one Miss Helen Thompson, President of the freshman class.

But the belle of "Screamland" was the Firewoman in Chief, who acted as a "puller-in" for the Fighting the Flames side show. The Chief Firewoman had a beautiful Trilby voice which, with the big megaphone she used, brought more visitors to the side show than to any other in the place. She made it so attractive that the real fireman who was there to prevent real fires, spent most of the evening standing near wearing a broad grin. The Chief Firewoman made use of him as an attraction.

"Ladies and Gentlemen," she called, laying her hand upon his shoulder, "this is the only show where you get the worth of your money. This is a real fireman, a fair sample of what you will see inside. Come in and see rescues made from a ten-story building."

A Fighting-the-Flames show was given at intervals, when curtains were drawn back to show a couple of dozen lighted candles, upon which rushed fire girls in uniform and extinguished them as quickly as they could with several tiny atomizers and one length of garden hose. The tenth-story flame was made by a single candle on the upper rung of a rope ladder, but several fire girls had to make the attempt before one managed to climb high enough to get her atomizer in line with it.

There was a fat woman, who looked like a college cozy corner stuffed with pillows; a bearded lady, whose frizzes seemed to have dropped down to her chin; ladies of the harem, in eyeglasses and gauzy frocks, who sold fudge, and a capped and gowned future instructress lay flat on her face in a swimming attitude on the floor of the Chamber of Horrors all the evening. It was apparent that the instructress was weighed down by quotations from Rousseau, Herbert Spencer, and others, which were done in brown paper, though there were visitors who said they felt sure from her attitude that she represented a turtle.

Anyhow, it was a great show, and brought in a good sum of money. Miss Abbie Howell, the Chairman, planned it.

IRVING'S BURIAL IN ABBEY.

Cabinet Ministers and Ambassadors Present—Mourning Worn in London.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—By the side of the remains of Garrick and under the shadow of the statue of Shakespeare, the ashes of Sir Henry Irving were to-day buried in Westminster Abbey.

King Edward was represented by Gen. Sir Dighton Probyn, Keeper of the Privy Purse, and the Prince of Wales by Lieut. Col. William H. P. Carrington, Controller of the Prince's Household, while the Cabinet Ministers and Ambassadors attended in person, Whitelaw Reid, who is visiting in Scotland, coming to London purposely to testify America's regard for the dead tragedian.

The service was simple and short. At noon the procession started from the Chapel of St. Faith, where the casket containing the ashes had lain overnight, and passed through the cloisters to the space between the choir and the sanctuary, where the casket, covered with a pall of laurel wreaths, was placed on a catafalque. The lesson was read by Canon Duckworth, the Sub-Dean of Westminster, and Bishop Welldon, Archdeacon Wilberforce, and Canon Hensley Henson took part in the service. After the anthems the casket was borne to the grave as the organ peeled forth the funeral march from "Coriolanus."

The chief mourners were Lady Irving and the sons of Sir Henry Irving. A few intimate friends and the pall bearers, Sir Squire Bancroft, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Tennyson, Lord Burnham, Sir Alexander Muir-Mackenzie, Beerbohm Tree, Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema, Sir James Dewar, Arthur Wing Pinero, Mr. Burdett-Coutts, M. P.; Sir Charles Wyndham, John Hare, George Alexander, and J. Forbes Robertson, followed the casket to the grave, in the narrow space surrounding which are the tombs and statues of many of England's great men of letters.

Of the mass of floral pieces sent by friends and admirers of Irving but four had places on the casket. One of these was a cross of lilies from Queen Alexandra bearing the words:

"To Sir Henry Irving from the Queen—Into Thy hands, O Lord! Into Thy hands!"

Scores of thousands of people stood in the streets for hours around the Abbey as the only means of paying a last tribute, while for those who were unable to get into Westminster Abbey services were held in several churches of the city. The flags on many of the public buildings, including the American Embassy and Consulate, were at half mast, and hundreds of persons wore crêpe bands and black ties.

THINK IRVING OVERHONORED.

London Weekly Papers Criticise the Interment in the Abbey.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 21.—A number of the weekly publications, including The Spectator, The Saturday Review, and The Outlook, contain articles expressing regret that the Dean of Westminster sanctioned the interment in Westminster Abbey of the ashes of Sir Henry Irving and denying to Irving greatness as an actor in the sense that Garrick was great.

The journals argue that space in the Abbey has become so limited that none but the nation's greatest should be interred there, and that it is impossible to regard Irving as in that category. Some of these articles openly assert that there are other actors of Irving's period as great, and perhaps greater, than he whom nobody would think of proposing for interment in the Abbey.

At the same time all the articles speak in most generous terms of Irving's great talent and personal character, and repudiate any desire to detract from his acknowledged merit except in connection with this question of deep national importance—interment in Westminster Abbey.

AMERIKA, HUGEST LINER, ARRIVES ON FIRST TRIP

Elevators and a Restaurant Among Her Novel Features.

DECK NAMED FOR ROOSEVELT

Latest Addition to the Hamburg-American Fleet Marvelously Luxurious and Complete in Arrangements.

The new Hamburg-American liner Amerika, in point of displacement the biggest ship in the world and the only transatlantic liner ever equipped with passenger elevators, came into port yesterday, having made her maiden trip across the Atlantic. She has among her appointments a flower shop, a restaurant à la carte, under the management of the Carlton Hotel of London; a railroad ticket office, where a passenger can purchase tickets to any part of the United States, Mexico, or Canada, and all Great Britain and Europe, as well as a great many other innovations.

Had it not been for a dense fog that settled over the Atlantic off Sandy Hook yesterday morning the Amerika would have reached her dock before 3 o'clock. As it was she arrived off the company's piers in Hoboken about 4 o'clock. All the Hamburg-American liners now in port, including the Fuerst Bismarck and the Patricia, were a mass of bunting from stem to stern in honor of the company's newest and finest ship. In front of the piers a crowd estimated at about 2,000, who were unable to get on the pier, stood around and listened to the bands and wondered what the new liner looked like.

Outwardly the Amerika resembles the great White Star liners Baltic, Cedric, and Celtic, having like them two buff funnels and a towering superstructure that reaches almost to the roof of the piers alongside which she is docked. As were the White Star boats, the Amerika was built at Belfast by the Harland & Wolf Company.

The Amerika is one of the most luxurious vessels afloat, the decorations, while elaborate, being harmonious and subdued, the blending of the colors reminding one of the decorations of the French sister liners La Lorraine and La Savoie. In the drawing room the principal decoration is a life size painting of Emperor William presented to the company by the Kaiser himself. This picture was painted by an Italian artist, who depicted the Kaiser in a uniform of pure white. The Kaiser didn't like so much white, and a German artist painted in a red coat.

The restaurant, according to the passengers, is a great success, and was crowded all the time, while the flower shop and the elevators also came in for an equal amount of attention. The telephone central office and the tourists' office were also commended.

The Amerika's gross tonnage is about 23,000, while her displacement is over 41,000 tons. She is 690 feet long, 74 feet wide, and 53 feet deep. She has accommodations for four classes of passengers—saloon, second cabin, third class, and steerage—while her principal decks are known as the Kaiser, Washington, Roosevelt, and Cleveland. She has also a well-equipped gymnasium, a nursery for children, and electric and hydropathic baths.

The Amerika came via Hamburg and Cherbourg, leaving the latter port at 1:40 A. M. last Friday. From Cherbourg Mole to the Sandy Hook Lightship, between which points the time of passage is calculated, the liner covered 3,050 miles. Her record for the voyage was 7 days, 17 hours, and 12 minutes. While the vessel made an hourly average speed for the voyage of only 16.488 knots, she is capable of much greater speed. In making the passage from Hamburg to Dover she averaged 17.26 knots per hour. Her daily runs from Cherbourg were 181, 421, 419, 419, 401, 356, 416, 405, and 32 to Sandy Hook. The steamer carried 1,631 persons, including the crew.

Some of the passengers on board were Herr Ballin, the Director General of the Hamburg-American Line; Count Wachtmeister, the Swedish Minister of Foreign Affairs; Gen. Russell Frost, W. A. Author, Manager of the Carlton Hotel, London, and W. B. Cogswell.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—The storm that was central Thursday night over South Michigan has moved rapidly and with steadily increasing intensity to the country north of Eastern Ontario, attended by dangerous gales on the Great Lakes, high winds in the States adjoining and also in the Upper Ohio Valley and Middle Atlantic States and portions of New England.

At Buffalo the wind attained a velocity of eighty miles an hour from the southwest and at Cleveland fifty-six miles an hour from the west.

Rain continued quite generally over the east half of the country, while over the western half the weather was fair.

Temperatures have fallen decidedly in the West Gulf States and over all districts east of the Mississippi River, except along the South Atlantic Coast, and they are now considerably below the seasonal average. The high pressure over the interior of the country will exercise a controlling influence on conditions for the next few days, and mostly fair weather may therefore be expected, with comparatively low temperature.

It will be colder Saturday in the States along the Atlantic Coast.

Winds along the New England Coast will be high west to northwest, diminishing Saturday night; on the Middle Atlantic Coast, northwest and diminishing; on the South Atlantic and fresh northwest to north; on the Gulf Coast, fresh north to northeast; on the lower lakes, westerly and diminishing; on the upper lakes, northwest, diminishing and becoming variable.

Steamers departing Saturday for European ports will have high west to northwest winds, diminishing Saturday night, clearing and much colder weather to the Grand Banks.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND SUNDAY.

Eastern New York, fair, colder Saturday, diminishing west to northwest winds; Sunday fair.

New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, and Delaware, fair, colder Saturday, fresh to brisk northwest winds; Sunday fair.

New England, fair, much colder Saturday, brisk to high west to northwest winds; Sunday fair.

3 A. M.	59	65	4 P. M.	64	53
6 A. M.	59	65	6 P. M.	61	58
9 A. M.	61	63	9 P. M.	60	53
12 M.	63	65	12 P. M.	63	50

The thermometer of the Weather Bureau is 285 feet above the street level.

The average temperature yesterday was 55; corresponding date 1904, 61; corresponding date for the last twenty-five years, 54.

The thermometer registered 64 degrees at 8 A. M. and 54 degrees at 8 P. M. yesterday, the maximum temperature being 67 degrees at 3 P. M. and the minimum 50 degrees at 11 P. M. The humidity was 97 per cent. at 8 A. M. and 53 per cent. at 8 P. M.

FIRST CLUB, THEN ART SHOP.

Evolution of an Athletic Club into a Haunt of Artisans.

The old home of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club, on Madison Avenue, near the Grand Central Station, has had its ups and downs; now it was to be taken by a new athletic club; again by a syndicate of women's clubs. For a series of years it lay vacant, a big brownstone elephant on the hands of its owners. It has been bought by the Tiffany Studios, formerly at 333 Fourth Avenue, and has been more or less rearranged within and without to adapt it to its new purposes.

More than one church has found itself invaded by the artist and artisan, but this is the first instance of a clubhouse of the largest size going the way of a church whose congregation has deserted it.

Mr. Louis C. Tiffany, who is the founder and moving spirit of the Tiffany Studios, has turned the main floor of the club, where the restaurant was, into a big apartment given up to the old furniture, curios, and bric-à-brac which were added to the other departments when Schmitt Brothers joined the firm. The second floor, where the theatre and dining room were, belongs to stained glass in all its brilliant, soft, and many-colored forms. Stained-glass windows may be seen about the mezzanine or gallery floor of the old theatre. Objects in Favrile glass, in enamel, and in the deep-toned pottery of the sort original with Tiffany are shown on tables in the rooms off the main gallery. The gymnasium floor is given up to rugs, hangings, screens, and other art textiles made from designs by Mr. Tiffany and his assistant artists in the studios here, or carried out from their designs by foreign workmen in Ireland, Belgium, Bohemia, or the Orient, wherever, in fact, men weave some special material in some special way desired for a given carpet, rug, or hanging.

Another department which will be pushed in the new building is general decorative work, the studios for which are in parts of the building not open to the public.

The house is not finished, but the departments are installed and the public seems to find the location convenient, to judge from the streams of visitors who brave the somewhat chaotic state of things. Apparently, the architectural details of the south door are not to Mr. Tiffany's liking, for he is having the round marble pillars shut out by piers of polished granite. The elevator has been condemned as in bad taste, and its elaborate decorations ruthlessly hidden with cloths. Many other places show the hurry of installation, and will be gradually brought into that harmony of tones which Mr. Tiffany demands. No date has been fixed for a formal opening reception. It may take another month before matters will be duly ordered and the interior have an air of finish. Meantime all the departments are busy and show the advantage of the change of location.

This move coincides with the removal of Tiffany & Co. from Union Square to its stately Italian Renaissance palace at the corner of Fifth Avenue and Thirty-eighth Street. The Tiffany Studios have migrated to the club zone just as the talk about a change of location for the Union League and the Lotos Club intensifies. Their removal from Fourth Avenue and Twenty-fifth Street is the first break in the collection of bric-à-brac shops in that locality. It remains to be seen whether others will follow and make of Madison Avenue north of Forty-second Street another range for the devotees of old paintings, furniture, and bric-à-brac.

IT OPPRESSED SIR CHARLES.

The English Football Player Finds the Weight of His Own Foot.

Sir Charles Kirkpatrick, the goal tender of the English eleven that has come over to teach Association football to America, is getting a reputation for being absent-minded.

Sir Charles and others of the team went out to Prospect Park, Brooklyn, yesterday to play some cricket, just for variety. The party happened to get into a car which was more than comfortably filled. Sir Charles stood. At last, after having shown signs of irritation for several minutes, he leaned to the ear of a friend and said in a low tone:

"My word, but the crowding here is uncomfortable."

Two minutes later he confessed that somebody was standing on one of his feet. It was a heavy foot that was on his, he added.

In two more minutes the crowd dwindled out of the door, so that Sir Charles was nearly the only one left standing. Sir Charles's friend looked down at Sir Charles's feet. Sir Charles was still hanging like a statue by a strap. One of his feet was heavily planted on the other.

"It really was a heavy foot that was on yours," said Sir Charles's friend.

And those who didn't see the joke were soon told about it.

BIG ELEVENS FEAR TO-DAY'S HARD GAMES

Columbia Doubtful About Winning from Amherst's Team.

BROWN MAY DEFEAT PENN

Harvard Meets West Point and Princeton Plays Lafayette in Games That Should Be Interesting.

The outcome of to-day's games on the gridiron will determine the success of more than one big team in their important contests to be played later. There is a good chance of defeat for at least two of of the big elevens in to-day's schedule. The game at American League Park between Columbia and Amherst is decidedly of doubtful issue. The game at Philadelphia between Pennsylvania and Brown may be similarly classed, and while Princeton is not likely to taste defeat at the hands of Lafayette there should be an uncomfortably close game played in Tigerville. Yale meets Pennsylvania State, who have always made a good showing against the Blue, but no serious difficulty is expected by Eli in scoring a victory. Cornell plays the strong Western University of Pennsylvania eleven, and after the Ithacans' two weeks' lay off they may have trouble in getting their plays running smoothly, while Harvard plays West Point at the Military Academy.

Locally the keenest interest centres in the Columbia game. The vacillating sentiments expressed by the Morningside collegians regarding their team is most confusing. They rise one day on the highest wave of enthusiasm and the next are cast down over the slightest reversal. The addition of new material and the settlement of the question of leadership ought to have a beneficial effect and make the Blue and White play the best game they have this year. Whether it will do this or not remains for the game itself to develop. Amherst promises to be the stiffest proposition they have yet had, and it would not surprise many to see the Massachusetts team win.

Columbia will not have out her full strength if Coach Morley's announcement of the line-up is the team put in the field. He gave out these names last night: Fischer, left end; Brown, left tackle; Echeverria, left guard; Algeltinger, centre; Ryan, right guard; Duden, right tackle; Enos, right end; Donnovan, quarter back; Helmrick, left half back; Lindo, right half back, and Fisher, full back.

This arrangement makes the left side of the line decidedly weak. Brown and Enos as tackles have had very little practice, while the students fear the fast Amherst backs may be able to turn the left wing of the Columbia line. It was hoped that the regular men, Ross, Van Saltza, and Muir would be able to get into the game and brace the team.

The back field is fair, although Findo is not as strong a player as Armstrong, who has been out of the game since he was injured in the Wesleyan match.

Harvard's football players, coaches, and substitutes, numbering more than forty men, left yesterday afternoon, with the cheers of 800 students ringing in their ears, for West Point, where they will play the cadets to-day. Before the team left there was a short signal practice in the betting cage on Soldiers' Field, the feature of which was the appearance of Fisher Nesmith at right half back, where he will play to-day. Nesmith has been doing brilliant work on Soldiers' Field the past week. The eleven to-day will be considerably stronger than that which ran up only 22 points against Springfield Training Schoool last Saturday.

In preparation for the game with Harvard to-day West Point had a light signal practice yesterday. Most of the cripples will start the game, though their poor condition will tell on them. Smith will not play. Beavers taking his place. The team will line up: Left End—Wilhelm; Left Tackle—Erwin; Left Guard—Weeks; Centre—Abraham; Right Guard—Christy; Right Tackle—Mettler; Right End—Gillespie; Quarterback—Garri; Right Half—Hill; Left Half—Beavers, and Full Back—Torney.

The Princeton players practiced signals only yesterday, expecting the Lafayette game to-day will be one of the hardest on their preparatory schedule. The players have been worked unusually hard and show signs of being trained a little fine. Herring will not be in the game at right tackle, but the rest of the eleven will be intact, except Tenney, who will make way for Dillon at quarter. The team will line up with Brasher, left end; Cooney, left tackle; Dillon, left guard; Carothers, centre; Raffetry, right guard; Phillips, right tackle; Tooker, right end; Dillon, quarter back; Bard, left half back; Daub, right half back; McCormick, full back.

Pennsylvania will try a shifting of line men to-day in the game with Brown to repair the damage done by the illness of Ziegler. The coaches have about given up hope of having him back at all this season, and have moved Draper, the crack new tackle, to the other side of the line at guard and placed Zilligan and Rooke at tackle to fight for the place. The trial of these men will be severe to-day. The end position is also causing Penn concern. If these two problems can be successfully solved there may be some hope for the Quakers. The Brown team is believed to be one of the best of the smaller elevens.

Yale will try out Cates and Congden at left end to-day to determine which shall have the place. The game will also go far to settle on either Jones or Hutchinson for quarter. Andrews may play left guard and Roome or Stuart at full back. Forbes, Flanders, Tripp, and Shevlin will be in their regular places. Bigelow will play tackle, and Veeder, Stevenson, Morse, and Wylle divide the work at half back.

Yesterday the team was given an hour's hard drill on the wet grounds bucking the scrubs, and made two touchdowns. Stuart and Roome did well.

Cornell will present to-day her strongest team against the husky eleven from the Western University of Pennsylvania. All but one of Coach Warner's final selections for the 'Varsity will be in the line-up. Cook at left tackle will keep on the side lines on account of an injured knee. Dann, of last year's eleven, will take his place.

The eleven will line up with Schildmiller, left end; Dann, left tackle; Thompson, left guard; Hodge, centre; O'Rourke, right guard; Costello, right tackle; Vanorman, right end; Rice, quarter back; Walders, left half back; Gibson, right half back; Halliday, full back. Yesterday's practice was light in anticipation of the hard game.

The Navy players took only a half hour's practice yesterday preparatory to the game with University of North Carolina to-day. The team is in fine shape, with the exception of Capt. Howard, who is still out of the game with a strained shoulder. Decker has been showing up finely at quarter, and will be given a chance instead of Norton. Douglass and Doherty at halves, and Ghormley at full will start the game.

ENGLISH HOUNDS MADE GOOD.

Contention That They Would Not "Kill" Settled at Meadow Brook.

Special to The New York Times.

HEMPSTEAD, L. I., Oct. 20.—British foxhounds scored a big success in to-day's hunt. Thomas Hitchcock and others, who favor the American breed, declared that English hounds were good only to follow a drag, and would not kill a fox. "Jack" Foster, the English huntsman, took exception to the statement, and as a result several big sums were wagered as to whether the imported hounds would kill a fox this season. The start was made to-day from the Meadowbrook Clubhouse in a pouring rain, which kept the field very small. The run, which was a lively one, lasted forty minutes, the advocates of the English hounds being successful.

The fox was started at East Williston, and ran toward Wheatley Hills and around Jericho, and then back to East Williston, Reynard being finally caught within 200 feet of its hole and killed by the pack. Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, the only woman in the saddle, and who rode astride, got the brush, and Beverly Robinson got the mask. After "Billy" Scarratt, the English first whip of the Meadowbrook Hunt, had jumped the fox it was hunted mostly in sight, but at times, while going through thick undergrowth, the pack had to depend entirely upon the scent. Mr. Foster, who has had charge as huntsman of the English pack, has just recovered from a broken leg. He essayed to hunt to-day, but found the pace too fast, and designated First Whip Scarratt to take his place.

GLIDDEN AUTO TOUR PLANS.

Second Run for Trophy May Go to Chicago and Canada.

Charles J. Glidden, the donor of the Glidden Automobile Touring Cup, met the members of the Touring Committee of the American Automobile Association yesterday afternoon at the Automobile Club of American, and discussed with them the plans for the second contest for the trophy. In view of the fact that a decided impetus has been shown this season in favor of long touring competitions, several of the members favored a more extended tour next season, which would test the running properties of the cars more thoroughly. It has been suggested that the run extend as far as Chicago, with perhaps a homeward journey through Canada. This would require about three weeks. Mr. Glidden favors a route of this sort, and said he saw no reason why over a hundred machines ought not to be in line. A sub-committee was appointed to draw up a plan, the members being Augustus Post, A. R. Pardington, W. C. Temple, George E. Farrington, Ezra Fitch, M. M. Belding, Jr., and A. G. Batchelder.

Mr. Glidden will sail for Europe with his wife on Tuesday to resume his automobile world tour. He will remain a few days in London, where he left his car when he returned to America last June. Early in November he will sail for India, and hopes to begin his motor car trip by Dec. 1. He will return to America about June 1.

On Monday night at the request of the Automobile Club of America Mr. Glidden will deliver his lecture on his experiences in foreign lands with an automobile. It will be illustrated by over 200 views.

ENGLISH RUNNER PUNISHED.

Champion Shrubb Permanently Suspended for Violating Amateur Rule.

According to late English advices Alfred Shrubb, the champion amateur runner of England, has been permanently suspended by the Amateur Athletic Association, under the rule which debars an athlete from asking for or receiving expenses in connection with athletic sports. It appears that Shrubb asked permission of the association to go to Canada, undertaking at the same time to pay his own expenses. The latter part of the promised contract was evidently looked upon by the governing body as rather peculiar, and permission to go to Canada was refused to Shrubb. Not only this, the association pursued its inquiries further, there being reason to believe that Shrubb was not quite so candid as he might have been in the matter. The result of this investigation led to his suspension.

JENKINS CRUSHED BY TURK.

Madrali Too Strong for the American Wrestling Champion.

That "Tom" Jenkins, the champion wrestler of America, at the catch-as-catch-can style, is no match for Ahmed Madrali, the Turk, was clearly demonstrated in their recent match at the Lyceum, London, when the Turk won in two straight falls. All accounts of the contest agree that the Turk was far too strong for the American. For seven minutes in the first bout Jenkins gave no sign of taking the initiative. Then, as quick as a flash, the Turk turned Jenkins upside down and hugged one of his legs with a grip that all of the American's wriggling, wrenching, and subterfuges could not affect. But the latter's thickly shod boot came into terrific contact with Madrali's nose, and the hold was released.

Race Horses Sold at Auction.

A sale of race horses in training, consigned by half a dozen different establishments, among them the Boston Stable of G. L. Richards, Andrew Miller, and Fred Johnson, was held in the paddock of the Jamaica race course yesterday. The most important lot was that of the Boston Stable, the owner stating that he intended to sell out, as he had arranged to go abroad. The prices were so unsatisfactory in every instance, however, that Mr. Richards bid in most of the horses, and will continue his stable with the same trainer who has managed the horses heretofore, Fred Lightfoot. Ostrich, of the Boston Stable's consignment, was the only horse reported as actually sold. Palette, bought by W. H. Putnam for $1,400, running the same afternoon in Mr. Richards's colors. The best prices of the offering were as follows:

Ostrich, b. c., 4 years, by Order-Plumage; Thomas Sexton	$6,500
Voladay, b. c., 4, by Faraday-Alta Vola; W. Cahill	1,150
Oro, br. c., 4, by Hastings-Donna De Oro; W. H. Snyder	2,500
Delude, b. f., 2, by His Highness-Charma; C. H. Greenfield	1,000
Ingleside, br. c., 2, by Ingoldsby-Royal Una; W. Langdon	1,050

Notes of the Thoroughbreds.

The Stewards of the Jamaica meeting yesterday called up the light-weight jockey, Walter Miller, who rode Red Knight when that horse was beaten by Alma Dufour in the last race Thursday, and asked the boy to explain why he waited so far out of the race with Red Knight, the post favorite in the betting. Miller's peculiar riding on the horse was explained by the boy as his idea of riding to the orders he had to wait with Red Knight. Trainer Matt Byrnes having told him to pay no attention to Sailor Boy, but to lie within a length or so of Alma Dufour. Miller confessed that he had no idea that the pace was as slow as it was, and said he thought he waited close enough, though he really dropped half a dozen lengths behind Alma Dufour when the horses were simply cantering. As Miller's reputation is of the best, the Stewards simply reprimanded him and warned him to be more alert in future if he wished to continue riding.

Woodsaw, the beaten favorite for the Garden City Stakes at Jamaica yesterday, pulled up only slightly lame after his sudden stop at the head of the stretch, but grew so lame while cooling out that until the last race Trainer A. J. Joyner was in doubt as to whether he would be able to get the horse back to his stable for the night.

John A. Drake, who has been buying useful horses wherever the chance of getting winners offered, yesterday completed an agreement whereby he secured second call on the now fashionable apprentice rider, Wiley, a boy whose contract C. E. Durnell bought in the Summer for a big price. Durnell retains first call on Wiley.

Starter Mars Cassidy has signed a contract whereby he will go to New Orleans, after all, to start the racing on the new City Park track when the Winter meeting begins there on Christmas Day. Prior to the New Orleans engagement Starter Cassidy will act at the Hot Springs (Ark.) meeting, which opens on Nov. 4 and continues into December.

The lease under which State Senator P. H. McCarren raced the stake-winning two-year-olds Sir Voorhees and Edna Jackson through the latter part of the season has been canceled and the horses have been returned to Newton Bennington, from whom they were leased.

The order of the Aqueduct Stake programme has been announced, and as arranged stakes will be run for each day of the meeting, with two stakes, the Belle Rose and Aqueduct Handicap, set for the opening day, Nov. 2, and two stakes each on Saturday, Nov. 4; election day, Nov. 7, and Saturday, Nov. 11.

An agreement for a conditional partnership in the world's record holder, Roseben, and the fast horse, Jacquin, has been filed with the Jockey Club between D. C. Johnson, in whose name the horses ran all through the year, and J. W. Henning. Mr. Henning went into racing two years ago with a lot of yearlings he bought at the Summer sales, but met with such little success in the yearling lottery that he has decided to try again with developed race horses.

FOOTBALL TO-DAY. Amherst vs. Columbia at 2:30 P. M. American League Park.—Adv.

ENGLISH FOOTBALL TO BE TESTED HERE

Pilgrim Association Team Will Play All-New York To-day.

PERSONNEL OF THE ELEVEN

Visiting Organization, Whose Mission Is to Encourage Game, Comprises Many Famous Players.

The Pilgrim team of English Association amateur football players will play against a team representing all-New York at the Polo Grounds this afternoon. The mission of the visitors is to introduce the sport to American colleges, with the expectation of international contests between representative elevens from England, America, and Canada. It is generally supposed the English are as much superior to Americans in Association football as Americans are to English in baseball. Association football occupies the same relative position among Englishmen as a Winter sport that baseball as a Summer pastime does among Americans.

England has sent a special team of gentlemen players to America to introduce the sport under the most favorable auspices. Unlike our college game, it is in every essential detail a most interesting contest from a spectators' standpoint. The play is very open, and the men are not allowed to do anything but kick or "lead" the ball. They are not allowed to even touch it with hands or arms. It is football in all that the name implies, and the Britishers have spent nearly two months in this country trying to teach football players that football with feet and not hands is the proper thing. As a spectacle it is almost the equal of baseball.

Capt. Fred H. Milnes of the Pilgrims said yesterday:

"We came to America to demonstrate Association football as it is played in England. We heard that the game was not generally played in the United States. Our idea was to come over and start a boom for it, which would result in popularizing it and produce teams which could visit England for international matches. Of course we play to win, but this is not our principal purpose. What we particularly desire to accomplish is to impress Americans with the manner in which we play the game. I think and hope they will like, approve, and after the team sails next Wednesday find it to their advantage and to their pleasure to play the game as we do."

The Pilgrims' team is composed of many of the best exponents of the game in England and Scotland. The star of the side is Vivian Woodward, centre forward, who has played that position for all-England for the past three seasons. This means that he is the best man in that position on the other side. Sir Charles Kirkpatrick, goal, is at his best playing half back, but the Pilgrims' goal keeper missed the boat at Liverpool, and the Baronet was impressed for the position. He keeps a capital goal, and is a strong kicker. Fred H. Milnes is full back and Captain. He is a magnificent kicker, fast, and possesses remarkable ability to get the ball away from his man. He is highly regarded by his men, and has their complete confidence.

The teams will line-up as follows:

Pilgrims.	Position.	All New York.
Sir C. Kirkpatrick	Goal	Gray
F. H. Milnes	Right full back	Martin
E. A. Nuttal	Left full back	Donald
C. W. Storray	Right half back	Minto
J. D. Barnsdale	Centre half back	Armstrong
T. Fletcher	Left half back	Gordon
J. E. Raine	Outside right	Teit
A. C. Coopland	Inside right	Inglis
V. J. Woodward	Centre forward	Gorman
F. S. Welmsley	Inside left	McNeill
J. E. Bryning	Outside left	Murray

HUNT RACES OPEN TO-DAY.

Steeplechase Programme for Opening of Meeting at Morris Park.

The inaugural steeplechase meeting of the United Hunts Racing Association will open to-day on the Morris Park race course. The meeting will be the first held exclusively for cross-country racing about New York City since the experiment of the National Steeplechase and Hunt Association on the same track more than ten years ago, but the conditions now are vastly more favorable to the sport, and there is every promise that the United Hunts meeting will be established permanently as a feature of the Fall racing season.

The steeplechase programme announced has interested owners of cross-country horses of all grades, but has attracted the most attention among the amateurs who own and ride their own horses and the hunting men who will furnish a great part of the sport. Fashionable society also is keenly interested in the three days of racing planned at Morris Park, and the advance sales of boxes and season badges and the increased subscriptions to the club give every assurance of the financial success of the racing. The programme for to-day is made up of six races, four of these over the steeplechase course and a fifth on the flat for horses that have been placed in steeplechases under the National Steeplechase and Hunt Association rules. The entries follow:

GRENADE BEAT WOODSAW FOR SELLING STAKES

Second Choice Won Handily—Odds-On Favorite Unplaced.

WINNERS ALL WELL BACKED

Lochinvar, at 8 to 1, Was the Longest Chance Horse Successful in the Mud at Jamaica.

The one change in racing conditions at the Jamaica track yesterday, a heavy course as the result of the rain, had no effect on the established averages that seem to rule the Metropolitan Jockey Club's Fall meeting. Regardless of the dismal weather, the average crowd of about 10,000 regular patrons were present, and the usual three favorites were among the winners.

The results were vastly more profitable for backers, however, than the fact that three post choices won indicates, for every winner of the six was heavily backed, two second choices and a well-supported long chance, Lochinvar, backed from 10 to 1 down to 8 to 1, supplementing the successes of the favorites and making another unpleasant day for the bookmakers.

The fields straight through the card were of fair class for the season, though the muddy going caused numerous scratches, the mile and a sixteenth handicap, which was reduced to a four-horse race, Ormonde's Right being among the horses withdrawn, suffering the greatest damage by the scratching. The single stake fixture, the Garden City, at one mile and a sixteenth, selling, stood out as the feature of the programme, this attracting to the post a field of seven horses, of which the three-year-old Woodsaw, from the Paget stable, was favorite at odds on throughout the betting, with Grenade, a cast-off from the same establishment and a winner in fair company only a few days before, a firm second choice. The going was supposed to be eminently suited to Woodsaw, and that colt, breaking in the first flight, went on in the lead, attended by d'Arkle, to the middle of the last turn, with Palette and Grenade close up to that point. On the bend into the stretch d'Arkle showed in front, and Woodsaw was driven to the whip, the favorite stopping a few yards further on and falling back beaten, while Grenade closed on d'Arkle, and in the run to the last furlong pole picked up the leader, and then, coming away at the end, won handily, with d'Arkle second and Oarsman, who closed from back in the field, third.

The longest-chance winner of the day turned up in Lochinvar in a rather curious contest for the first purse of the day, the two best-backed horses being disposed of by the start, though the bookmakers did not profit greatly thereby, as Lochinvar was well backed at odds averaging about 10 to 1. COLLEGE GOLF HONORS CAPTURED BY YALE

Knowles and Abbott to Meet for Individual Championship.

LOW SCORES ON WET GREENS

Princeton Men Lost in Second Round at Garden City, But Gilbert of Harvard Reaches Semi-Finals.

It is all Yale now in the intercollegiate golf championship for individual honors. Ellis Knowles and Robert E. Abbott will meet to-day on the links of the Garden City Golf Club in the final thirty-six-hole round for the championship title for the coming year. Last year Harvard held both the team and individual championships, but Yale won the team event on Wednesday, so that the golf conditions between the rival New England colleges will be reversed this season.

Percy Gilbert of Harvard was the only player outside of Yale who got a place in the semi-final round, which was played in the afternoon. In the morning the three Princeton survivors from the preceding day's play, Howard Gee, who made the low score in the qualifying round; Thomas Liggett, Jr., and Ralph Peters, Jr., were put out of the tournament. Gee's defeat was one of the surprises of the day. Mason E. Phelps of Yale beat him by 3 up and 1 to play. Abbott beat Peters by the same score, and Gilbert defeated Liggett easily by 7 up and 6 to play. Abbott and Peters had decidedly the most interesting match of the morning. Both were in good form on the out holes, finishing in 39 strokes each, and began play for the tenth hole with honors even. Abbott got the tenth and eleventh, Peters taking six for the latter to four for the Yale man, a poor drive and bunker troubles costing Peters two strokes. Five holes were then halved, but Abbott took the next and the match. Abbott's score of 79 was excellent. The cards:

Abbott, out	4	3	5	5	4	5	6	4	4	—40
Peters, out	4	4	5	5	4	5	6	4	3	—40
Abbott, in	4	4	4	6	4	5	5	4	3	—39	—79
Peters, in	5	6	4	6	4	5	5	5	4	—44	—84

In the afternoon Abbott met Gilbert, and won by 3 up and 2 to play. He got a lead early in the game, but although the Harvard man made a hard fight he could not cut down his Yale opponent's advantage.

By the same score, 3 up and 2 to play, Ellis Knowles beat Phelps in the afternoon. It was a splendid match from the start, and the winner's golf for the first nine holes has not been excelled in the tournament. On the sixth green Knowles had a lead of four. Then Phelps won his first hole, leaving Knowles three up, and as the next two were halved, Knowles finished the first half of the match with a commanding lead. He then won the tenth, but poor play in the thirteenth cost him seven, while Phelps won it handily in five. The remaining five holes were halved, the bye hole being played out. The scores of both players were very low, particularly in view of the soggy greens, occasioned by the hard rain early in the day. The cards were:

Knowles, out	4	3	4	4	3	4	6	4	4	—36
Phelps, out	4	4	4	5	4	5	5	4	4	—39
Knowles, in	4	5	4	7	4	5	5	5	3	—42	—78
Phelps, in	5	5	4	5	4	5	5	5	3	—41	—80

Knowles beat Dwight Partridge, the Yale freshman and interscholastic champion, in the morning by the good score of 4 up and 2 to play. Summary of the two matches:

Intercollegiate Championship.—Second Round—Ellis Knowles, Yale, beat Dwight Partridge, Yale, 4 up and 2 to play; Mason E. Phelps, Yale, beat Howard J. Gee, Princeton, 3 up and 1 to play; Percy Gilbert, Harvard, beat Thomas Liggett, Jr., Princeton, 7 up and 6 to play; Robert E. Abbott, Yale, beat Ralph Peters, Jr., Princeton, 3 up and 1 to play.

Semi-Final Round—Knowles beat Phelps, 3 up and 2 to play; Abbott beat Gilbert, 3 up and 2 to play.

AMBLER LAW ON APPEAL.

The Born Case, on Which Many Depend, Argued in Appellate Court.

The case brought in the name of Jacob Born and backed by the liquor dealers, to test the constitutionality of the Ambler Law, was argued yesterday before the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. Possibly fifty other cases depend on the Born case, and the action of the police in raiding so-called hotels has been delayed to a great extent pending a decision. The decision will finish the second step of the movement to have the matter settled.

Born has a hotel at 2,362 Third Avenue. Under the Ambler law Superintendent of Buildings Hopper reported that the hotel did not comply with the law. Edward H. Healy, Deputy Commissioner of Excise, then announced that Born's liquor tax certificate had been revoked. Mr. Hopper thereupon gave Born ten days to stop using his building as a hotel and thirty days to remove the bedroom partitions. Born got an injunction forbidding Mr. Hopper from interfering with his business, but failed to get injunctions against Excise Commissioner Cullinan and Deputy Healy.

The case was then taken to the Appellate Division. It will undoubtedly be taken to the Court of Appeals.

D Cady Herrick appeared yesterday for Born, Attorney General Mayer for Commissioner Cullinan, Herbert H. Kellogg for Healy, and Assistant Corporation Counsel Terence Farley for Hopper.

Mr. Herrick argued that the law was unconstitutional because it took property without due process of law and without compensation. He regarded the liquor tax certificate as property.

Attorney General Mayer said he admitted frankly that the provision relating to the removal of partitions was of very doubtful constitutionality; he would not ask that it be enforced. But the real purpose of the law, he said, was to prevent the liquor tax certificate from being used as an excuse for running a hotel that would not otherwise be used in that capacity at all, and he maintained that that purpose should be carried out.

Decision was reserved.

Thieves Didn't Even Leave Bedclothes for the Mantells.

Thieves broke into the apartments of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Mantell, on the ground floor at 310 East 102d Street, last Monday and stripped it completely of furniture, crockery, bedding, and wearing apparel. Then, posing as expressmen, they carried off their loot in a wagon. The Mantells had to borrow bed clothing that night.

Detective Stein found the stolen property in the basement flat of the tenement at 324 East 100th Street yesterday. A woman found there was arrested. She said she was a Mrs. Kugler.

TRADE CONDITIONS.

Discussing trade conditions Bradstreet's says in its issue of to-day:

Trade reports are rather more irregular, but industry is still at high tension. Heavy rains West and too high temperatures South and East have exercised an influence, but back of this is to be reckoned the fact that wholesale trade has been active for three months past, and some quieting is naturally in order. Colder weather now advancing is reported stimulating retail trade and influencing reorder business with jobbers. Lifting of quarantines has unquestionably helped Southern trade, but effects of this have been partly counterbalanced by the holding of cotton for higher prices, which also retards collections. Car shortages are becoming more acute, the Pacific Coast now feeling their influence, and grain, lumber, coal, coke, and ore shipments are delayed thereby, with effects on retail trade and collections. Bank clearings now compare with large totals a year ago, and gains are small—in fact, trifling.

Industries still feel the impetus of an unprecedented Fall demand. Iron and steel are active as never before at this late date, and prices still tend upward. Coal is experiencing the usual active Fall demand—hampered, however, by inability of shippers to fill orders, owing to lack of cars. Coke tends upward, and large interests are buying heavily into next year. Building is active beyond precedent, both in the large cities and in the country. Cotton manufacturing is active, and higher wages have been granted. Manufacturing for holiday account is very active.

The price situation is strong as a whole, though some weaknesses, as in sugar, corn, hog products, and raw silk, and quiet in other lines of raw material, point to demand having been satisfied.

Bank clearings for the week ending with Oct. 19—$2,787,650,269—are 2 per cent. smaller than last week, but 1.3 per cent. in excess of last year. Exchanges outside New York City total $1,044,246,671, about 1 per cent. over last week and 10 per cent. above last year.

Supt. Van Keuren to Leave the Erie.

Another step in the consolidation of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton with the Erie is the retirement of George Van Keuren as General Superintendent of the Erie Division and the appointment to that place of R. H. Bowron, who has been General Manager of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton. Mr. Van Keuren, after twenty-one years of service with the Erie, will retire.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Rise; Call Money Rates, 4¾@3 Per Cent.

Market Responds to Easier Money and Banks' Cash Gain—Exchange Advances.

Stocks opened slightly higher yesterday, uninfluenced by London's early irregularity, gathered strength through the morning and rose buoyantly in the afternoon hours, closing at or near top prices, with gains running from 1 to 3 points in the active issues. The volume of business was heavy, running well above 900,000 shares. The direct cause of the day's movement seemed to lie in the easier rates at which money was obtainable, and in favorable forecasts of to-day's bank statement, preliminary figures showing an apparent gain of between $3,500,000 and $5,000,000 in cash on the week's currency movements. The upward turn started in the industrial issues under the leadership of American Locomotive, embracing later the traction shares and specialties, and ultimately many of the standard stocks, although in these the gains were less marked. American Locomotive rose 8⅞ points, American Wool 8¼ points, and American Sugar 2 points, while gains of a point or more were frequent elsewhere in the industrial list. Brooklyn Rapid Transit advanced 3 points, while Metropolitan rose less than a point. Jersey Central rose 5 points and Delaware and Hudson 2¾ points, while Lackawanna, on sales of 300 shares, fell 18 points. Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, Pennsylvania, Baltimore and Ohio, and Atchison gained less than a point. There was reported no noteworthy increase in commission house business during the day, and the exceptional volume of the transactions was generally ascribed to professional activity under the stimulus of an easier money position.

Forecasts of the currency movement of the week indicated a gain of not less than $3,500,000 on the known movements of currency. The gain comes largely from the heavy receipts of foreign gold, which figured only slightly in last week's statement, and from the substantial pension disbursements, these accounting in the main for the Sub-Treasury's loss of $4,157,000 to the banks on the week's transactions. Not since June had the banks gained in this way in their operations with the Sub-Treasury; the explanation of the results of the present week lying largely in the fact that interior correspondents have, for the moment, at least, ceased to call on the local banks to care for internal revenue collections. The preliminary figures indicate a favorable statement, even if the loan reduction policy so long and drastically pursued gives way, in view of the better prospect, to some expansion, but previous statements have proved the difference between a forecast based on known currency movements and the actual bank return. One factor which goes to render forecasts fallacious is an unannounced deposit of Government money with local banks. According to dispatches, Treasury officials in Washington yesterday admitted that some $2,000,000 of Government money had been deposited with banks, but with what banks and for what particular purpose was not made clear, although it was intimated that interior institutions received the funds. Along with the easier rates for call loans yesterday there was a relaxation in time money rates for certain periods. Money ruled easier at Berlin, and the improved outlook there and in London was reflected in the markets. Demand sterling again rose sharply, selling at 4.8675 for Tuesday's steamer.

PRICE OF STAPLES.

The index number of commodity prices proportioned to consumption, according to the figures compiled by Dun's Review, was $100.426 on Oct. 1, against $100.808 the month previous and $98.394 at the corresponding date in 1904. Little net change occurred in prices during the month of September, although there were numerous small fluctuations and a few changes of importance, but the variations almost neutralized each other. Articles of food advanced slightly in the aggregate, chiefly because of changes in breadstuffs, dairy, and garden products. Higher prices for eggs and milk were influential in this compilation because of their large per capita consumption, and it was natural that they should advance during an Autumn month. The strength in grain was not due to any fear of permanent scarcity, but merely the limited supplies at primary markets because of interrupted transportation and a large demand both from domestic mills and for export. There was some decline in prices of meats and miscellaneous food products.

LONDON STOCK MARKET.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—Rates for money and discounts were maintained in the market to-day, and the conditions were little changed.

On the Stock Exchange generally a better tone prevailed on bear covering, but trading was inactive. Consols were steady, bearing up kindred securities.

Americans opened steady, grew firmer on New York support, were mostly above parity and rather idle, rallied further during the last hour, and closed firm, with some stocks below the best quotations of the day.

Kaffirs hardened, though operators were nervous, through fears of further liquidation. Paris recently has been a heavy seller of these stocks.

Japanese imperial 6s of 1904 were quoted at 101⅞.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 28.07; Lisbon, 5.50.

Bullion amounting to £74,000 was taken into the Bank of England to-day, and £5,000 was withdrawn for shipment to Gibraltar.

Money, 3@3½ per cent. Discount rates: Short and three months' bills, 4 per cent.

INCREASE OF $22,000,000

Coinage Value of Silver Output Given as $217,850,200 in Report of Director of the Mint.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—George E. Roberts, the Director of the Mint, has prepared a statement of the world's production of gold and silver for the calendar year 1904, the figures being respectively, first, gold value; second silver in fine ounces, and, third, silver in commercial value.

This statement shows total gold valued at $347,150,700, an aggregate of 168,493,538 fine ounces of silver and a commercial value of silver totaling $97,726,300, the coinage value of which is $217,850,200.

These figures show an increase of about $22,000,000 in gold over the bureau's estimate for the calendar year 1903. The United States shows a gain of about $7,000,000 and South Africa of $18,000,000. The Director says that both of these countries are still upon a rising scale of production. Australia, on the other hand, is an important producer, which shows a tendency to reduce its contribution, although the falling off is not large and may be temporary. Considering developments in well-known fields, it seems a reasonable forecast to expect the world's output in 1905 to exceed that of 1904 by $25,000,000, with another gain probable in 1906.

In view of current discussion upon the influence of the increasing gold supplies upon commodity prices and wages, the bureau has been at some pains to collect data to show the influence of higher costs upon the gold mining industry itself. The conclusion reached is that, "although some items of mining costs have increased, the tendency on the whole is still downward. Improvements in mechanical appliances and metallurgical methods have so far more than offset the influences making for higher costs."

In all fields an important percentage of the output has come from properties that have not yielded a profit, and large expenditures have been made in prospecting which have never yielded any returns.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 20.—There was a spirited demand to-day for several of the leading arbitrage stocks, notably United States Steel common, Reading, Southern Railway, Erie, and Brooklyn Rapid Transit. Brokers with orders in these issues found little difficulty in filling them at the local Exchange instead of sending them to New York.

General strength was displayed, but the price improvement in the purely local shares did not extend beyond fractions, except in the case of Western New York and Pennsylvania, a small lot of which sold at an advance of 2½ points. Cambria Steel was in active demand, the rise in United States Steel being the incentive. Keystone Telephone developed marked activity in the late dealings, but its price did not vary much. New York was reported a buyer.

Lehigh Valley was scarce and advanced easily, and Philadelphia Company and United Gas also joined in the movement. The close was strong.

They received from the interior $4,075,100 and sent to the interior $7,102,000, of which there was transferred through the Sub-Treasury $1,570,000 to New Orleans, $100,000 to Cincinnati, and $1,315,000 National bank notes were sent to Washington for redemption. The loss to the interior was $2,126,900.

Receipts of new gold were $5,451,600, namely, $2,947,800 imported, $778,700 on New York Assay Office checks, $1,088,000 on San Francisco Mint checks and telegraphic transfers, and $637,100 on Seattle Assay Office checks.

Ordinary disbursements by the Sub-Treasury were $22,817,400. Payments by banks to the Sub-Treasury for customs, internal revenue, 5 per cent. redemption fund, &c., were $22,242,000. The gain on Sub-Treasury operations proper was $375,400.

The total gain by new gold and on Sub-Treasury operations was $5,627,000. Deducting from this the loss to the interior of $2,128,900, the net gain was $3,700,100.

The greater part of the loss to the interior was caused by the transfer through the Sub-Treasury of currency to New Orleans to the amount of $1,570,000. This transfer was made for the purpose of strengthening the associated banks of New Orleans, in order to protect one of the banks upon which an uncalled for run had been made. This was not strictly a part of the crop movement of currency, but nevertheless the money will probably stay at the South until the sugar crop has been made. This crop usually calls for several million dollars from New York.

The gain on Sub-Treasury operations proper is the first gain on such operations since the middle of last June. The importance of this gain consists in the fact that it shows that interior banks are not drawing so heavily as they have been upon their New York correspondents for transfers of internal revenue collections. Pension payments were $3,216,000, comparing with $1,436,000 in the preceding week. Customs collections were $4,149,700, comparing with $4,352,900 in the preceding week.

The Sub-Treasury received from banks and sent to Washington for redemption $3,251,000 mutilated currency.

A Financial Opportunity.
I wonder if I could place before you an opportunity, which is not a gold, silver, copper, or any kind of a mine, not an oil or gas well, not a gambling proposition in stocks, bonds, grain, or provisions, but one dealing with a possibility—greater, safer, and more certain than any of these—would you then be interested sufficiently to send me a postal? Do so—it costs you nothing. Personally, I am financially and morally responsible. I have that which revolutionizes a staple article of industry. I will send all this at my expense. Please let me hear from you.

The Whitney Company has been formed for the purpose of developing the water power of the Yadkin River in North Carolina. A letter from Mr. George I. Whitney, of Messrs. Whitney & Stephenson, Pittsburgh, President of the Company, gives the following details:

Present development, 40,000 horse-power, with sufficient land (over 13,000 acres), and water rights to build an additional 50,000 horse-power plant. Within a radius of 80 miles (easily reached by electric power transmission) there are now 257 cotton mills, using about 73,000 steam horse-power, costing $35 to $50 per annum. There are also numerous other mills and furniture factories within the same radius—contracts could now be made for the entire present development of 40,000 electric horse-power at highly remunerative rates.

Gross Annual Earnings, estimated		$630,000
Operating Expenses	$97,000
Interest on Bonds	270,000	367,000
Estimated Surplus		$263,000

We quote in detail from Mr. Whitney's letter as follows:

"I do not hesitate to say that the project is sound in every particular. The Company owns an enormous and unfailing water-power; the work is now more than 25% completed, and is being rapidly pushed by competent contractors, the T. A. Gillespie Company. There is a permanent constantly increasing demand for electric power at profitable prices without competition from nearby coal fields or forests, and there is no doubt that the Company will prove a highly profitable investment from its start.

"The development of this property from its inception has been in charge of the highest talent procurable in the country, and this is true of its legal and engineering departments, of the contractors who have taken charge of construction, who rank second to none in the country, and of the electrical and hydraulic builders, who will be readily recognized as of the highest class.

"As you know, there is demand for bonds of well-planned water power projects by reason of the permanence and large profits of such undertakings, as well as the inability of investors to buy desirable public utility or municipal bonds at remunerative prices. The bonds you now offer are, in my opinion, well secured, and should sell at a considerable premium in due time.

"Very truly yours, GEO. I. WHITNEY, President."

$1,500,000 of the bonds having been sold, we offer the remaining $3,000,000 for subscription at 100 and accrued interest.

Copies of the Prospectus and Mortgage can be had on application.

Report of Messrs. Hering & Fuller, Engineers, and the opinion of Hon. John S. Henderson, of Salisbury, N. C., as to the legality of the bond issue, can be seen at our office.

Greene Copper and Granby Copper each gained ⅜, but United fell off slightly. The sales of Western Maryland 4 per cent. bonds amounted to $21,000.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

One of the most potent influences on the speculative mind yesterday was the National City Bank's offering on the Stock Exchange of $4,000,000 at 4½ per cent. The immediate and almost unanimous deduction drawn from this incident was that the Standard Oil crowd was not unfavorably disposed toward the market. The sting in the tail of Mr. Vanderlip's speech was at once forgotten in the new light which illuminated the situation. The deduction may be true. It is a fact nevertheless that if any group of interests in Wall Street had stocks for sale the first step toward selling them would be to provide easy money with which they might be bought—that is, if the group concerned were in a position to do this.

Three days ago a trader found a cent at the Rock Island post on the Exchange. He was not given to superstition, but he had a friend who was, and he had heard all about it. Nevertheless he took the cent. He had sold some American Locomotive which he did not have just before he found the cent. He had sold the other man's stock at 60. Yesterday he bought back the American Locomotive at 66 and then he went around quietly to the Rock Island post and without any particular demonstration put down the cent where he had found it. He has decided to say nothing about it to his friends.

In banking offices the possibility of gold exports in the near future has been discussed for several days, but the element in the stock market which is likely to be most affected by the shipment of gold away from New York, should such be the outcome of the upward movement in exchange, is, so far, giving no thought to the subject. To discuss it in advance would leave no chance for surprise when the exports actually occurred and they would therefore not be formidable as an argument on the bear side of the market. It would, of course, suit the bears to keep knowledge of such a movement from every one—but themselves—until the very last moment. On the other hand, the recent imports which nine people out of ten now believe were brought about for stock market effect were industriously heralded in advance.

The estimates of the week's currency movement indicated yesterday that the banks had gained between $3,500,000 and $5,000,000. If the bank statement to-day actually shows such improvement in the banks' holdings of cash there will be room for considerable expanse in loans without affecting the surplus reserve, which last Saturday amounting to a little over $10,000,000.

Friday usually supplies the severest test to which the money market is put during the week. If yesterday's rates may be taken as an indication, call money is likely to be easier next week. The highest rate yesterday, notwithstanding the fact that loans carried over until Monday, was 4¾. Before the close money was being lent at 3 per cent. Last Friday call money was loaned as high as 6 per cent., and two weeks ago as high as 7¾ per cent. It was two weeks ago yesterday that the rate dropped suddenly, late in the day, to 2 per cent, with one loan reported at 1 per cent. That was a purely artificial decline. There was less reason to suspect the genuineness of yesterday's rates.

As there was much speculative difference of opinion in regard to the outcome of the Amalgamated Copper meeting on Thursday there was doubtless room for some disappointment at the failure of the Directors to increase the dividend. The stock moved yesterday less than most of the active issues. This may have reflected the fact that short covering in the stock, owing to sales by those who had bought in the expectation of an increased dividend, was easier than in most issues.

The easier monetary conditions which appeared yesterday were somewhat surprising to the short interest. The movement of the market indicated that they were inclined to cover rather hastily. Very few have been bearish recently on any other ground than that money was lacking for a bull campaign in stocks. A gradually declining market for lack of funds with which to carry prices upward has been the limit of the expectations of the average bearish trader. Many bulls have recently sold out their stocks for similar reasons. The latter were even more likely to be influenced by yesterday's decline in money than those who had both sold out and gone short of the market.

AMERICAN WOOLEN common closed at 40, with a net gain of 3¼ points. This is one of the common stocks of industrial concerns which are candidates for admission to the dividend list. The last annual report of the company showed an accumulated surplus of $8,196,925. The policy of the company, as stated recently by one of its Directors, has been to postpone dividends until a surplus of $10,000,000 is assured. If the present year is shown to be as profitable for the company as was 1904, the surplus will reach about that figure by the close of 1905.

FISH'S PARTY AT NASHVILLE.

Inspection Tour of Tennessee Central—$2,000,000 Improvements Planned.

NASHVILLE, Oct. 20.—President Stuyvesant Fish, Vice President Welling, Second Vice President Harahan, Third Vice President Hackstaff, Directors Charles M. Beach, John Auchincloss, W. M. Griswell, John Jacob Astor, and Cornelius Vanderbilt, and Judge J. M. Dickinson, general counsel, of the Illinois Central Railroad arrived here to-day over the Tennessee Central. They came, it is understood to inspect the Tennessee Central, recently leased. President Fish made the following announcement:

"For the account of the Southern Railway Company and the Illinois Central Railroad Company, the Standard Trust Company of New York has obtained a three-year option upon a controlling interest in the stocks and bonds of the Tennessee Central Railroad and the Nashville Terminal Company. It is expected that the Tennessee Central Railroad will be operated directly in the interest of the two railway companies, so as to give each an entrance into Nashville."

It is probable that $2,000,000 will be spent in extending Nashville terminal facilities, new shops, and other improvements.

WESTERN PACIFIC BONDS.

They Are to be Authorized, but May Never Be Needed.

A meeting of stockholders of the Western Pacific Railroad Company has been called for Nov. 9 to authorize $25,000,000 of second mortgage bonds. The following official announcement was given out at the company's office yesterday:

It is not contemplated to issue any more Western Pacific bonds, nor is there the slightest necessity for doing so. The stockholders' meeting on the 9th proximo is in pursuance of an arrangement made when the capital stock was increased from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000, and to enable the Western Pacific Company at some future time, should it so desire, to issue $25,000,000 of second mortgage bonds; but an issue of this kind is not contemplated, nor does the management believe it will be necessary for some years to come, and probably not at all.

The purpose of the issue, it was learned from one of the bankers who purchased the $50,000,000 issue of first mortgage bonds, is to enable the Denver and Rio Grande to reimburse itself for any advances it may make for the construction of the Western Pacific. When the first mortgage bonds were sold it was agreed that the Denver and Rio Grande would advance any additional sum that might be needed.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 20.—The local money market is a shade easier, especially for call loans. The usual table follows:

Call loans, 5½ per cent.; time loans, collateral, 4¾@5 per cent.; time loans, mercantile paper, 5 per cent.; Clearing House loans, 5 per cent.; New York funds at par; clearings, $26,578,421; balances, $1,421,451; Sub-Treasury debit, $71,7[illegible].

The local market after a strong opening, became active, and good gains were made throughout the list. Centennial was in demand, advancing to 31½. There has been some profit taking by traders who have helped the market in its advance, but at present there appears to be a good outside interest, and one that is not going to be eliminated in a day. Closing prices were strong, and at an advance all around.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 20.—Western Maryland Railroad stock was again a feature to-day and rose to 17, the best price since the syndicate dissolution. It later receded fractionally. There has been talk of buying of this stock by Pennsylvania Railroad interests, but the full control is vested in the Goulds. Local underwriters deny reports that they have been liquidating their holdings.

There is a firmer demand for trust company stocks, which was reflected by higher prices on sales or bids for Mercantile Trust, International Trust, Continental Trust, and Central Trust. Appreciation in the values of securities owned and a more favorable attitude of the public toward these issues are regarded as the moving cause in this improvement.

There was a good inquiry for investment bonds, and prices ruled steady. Alabama Coal and Iron 5s declined a point. The market closed dull, but firm. Sales: Shares, 3,359; bonds, $70,000. The list:

THE COMMERCIAL WORLD

GRAIN.—WHEAT—Just at a time when the wheat market appeared weakest yesterday, having sold off ⅝c from the previous night, bulls stepped in, and with a few strong buying orders had shorts in full retreat, the result being a complete recovery and ⅛ to ¼c advance for the day. Outside of the bull operations, however, there was not much in the situation to warrant buying, and room sentiment continued more bearish than otherwise. The opening was fairly steady at unchanged prices from the previous night, influenced by light Northwest receipts, with declines immediately following, and a weak market prevalent until after midday, when the bull support first appeared in volume. Foreign markets gave bulls no help, Liverpool closing ¼ to ⅜d net lower, Paris 5 to 10 points down, Berlin ½ to ¾ marks off, and Budapest 5 points net lower. The Argentina shipments were, according to Broomhall, 584,000 bushels, this being about 100,000 bushels less than the previous week, and a couple of hundred thousand less than expected. At the same time smaller Russian shipments were anticipated this week. Western receipts aggregated 1,088,000 bushels, or about the same as last year, the Northwest explaining its recent light movement with the statement that country roads have been in bad shape. The Minneapolis stock increased 600,000 bushels, and some reports said that Northwest country elevator houses held about 30,000,000 bushels of wheat. Regarding Winter wheat conditions The Modern Miller report was bearish, but had little effect, as bulls were in control of the market when it appeared, and the covering movement was not checked. No export business was reported. The cash market closed steady, with No. 2 red 91½c elevator and 92¾c free on board afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 93c, and No. 1 Northern, Manitoba, 94c, free on board afloat.

CORN—Neither in point of activity nor in the extent of fluctuations did the corn market follow wheat yesterday. It was very quiet throughout the session, and at the close in New York showed only a partial ⅛c net advance. The improvement in weather conditions and the easy cables brought out enough selling to satisfy demand and prevent any decided improvement in the market. There was a fair interior movement as compared with last year, although on the week receipts have decreased about 100,000 bushels. Export business amounted to nine loads. No. 2 corn was quoted at the close 61c nominal in elevator and 61c free on board afloat; No. 2 white, 62c, and No. 2 yellow, 62c, free on board afloat.

COTTON.—The cotton market showed continued firmness, and scored a further strong advance on covering of shorts and fresh bull support, inspired by bad weather reports, firm spot markets, and predictions for a bullish census report next week. The close was within 2@4 points of the top, and steady at a net advance of 22@24 points. The opening was firm at an advance of 2@12 points on reports of frost in the Northwestern belt, rains in the central belt, and predictions for colder weather on Friday night. Cables were a shade disappointing at the hour of the local opening, but firmed up later, and before the initial wave of buying subsided prices here showed a net gain of 22@23 points. A reaction of 5 or 6 points during the middle morning as a result of realizing was followed by a second upturn in the early afternoon, when December sold at 10.19c and January at 10.30c, or 25@26 points net higher, and 68 points up from the low level of last Tuesday. At this level realizing again became heavy, but the market yielded comparatively little, and was rallied just before the close on buying by Wall Street interests.

COFFEE.—It seemed that December liquidation taking the form of switching into later months rather than downright liquidation was the signal for a sharp advance in prices. At any rate, the market, after opening steady at unchanged prices to an advance of 5 points in response to steady European cables, ruled generally firm, with trade interests supporting and showing every willingness to relieve near-by longs of their holdings against sales of the later months. Prices advanced during the session and the close was steady, net 15@20 points higher. Sales, including the exchanges, were about 76,000 bags. The general news reflected little change in the situation. The rate of Brazilian exchange showed a continued declining tendency, being ⅛d lower according to the day's cable, but Rio was 50 reis higher. Santos remained unchanged and receipts continued slightly in excess of last year's figures. The European markets showed steadiness, particularly the French market, which it is said is influenced by the decreasing stock at that point and a considerable short interest in the near-by months. Warehouse deliveries at Havre for the past week were 35,000 bags, against arrivals of only 9,000 bags. Locally warehouse deliveries are increasing, being 25,674 bags at all ports yesterday, against 17,977 last year. The market for spot coffee was steady, with quotations held higher in some quarters and the average around 8 9-16c for Rio No. 7.

WHY DO YOU PAY RENT
When you can own your own home within 20 minutes of 84th Street Ferry, on one of the most picturesque bays on Long Island Sound?

BAYSIDE PARK
is only 10 miles from New York. It has 46 trains daily; commutation is only 10 cents, and upon the completion of the Pennsylvania tunnel it will take but fifteen minutes from Herald Square to Bayside. A number of artistic houses have just been completed; they contain every modern convenience and cost from $3,500 to $8,500. They can be bought with a cash payment of 10 per cent., the balance at $30 per month and upward, which covers all expenses, or you can buy lots from $250 and upwards, which from previous experience will increase from 50 to 100 per cent. in value within a very short time; these can also be bought on installments. Write for booklet, or better still, call and see us. We'll gladly pay your fare to run out and look at the property.

BAD MAN WITH WOODEN ARM.

He's Little, but He Knocked Out Two Big Men with Ease.

William McCreer, a baker with a wooden arm, quarreled at Sixty-eighth Street and Amsterdam Avenue yesterday afternoon with Jules Lang, and knocked his opponent out with such ease that Thomas Andrews, one of Lang's friends, interfered. McCreer is not only minus a real arm, but he is hardly more than five feet tall. Lang is a big man. So is Andrews, but Andrews shared Lang's fate.

James Addis, passing by while the fight was on, jumped in just in time to be arrested. The police arrived as he was getting into the game. All four were locked up in the West Sixty-eighth Street Station.

USHERS UNIONIZED.

New Demand of the Hebrew Actors in East Side Theatre.

The power of the United Hebrew Trades among the Hebrew unions was demonstrated yesterday at the Irving Music Hall, in Broome Street, when a general strike was threatened unless the ushers, two in number, joined the Hebrew Actors' Union.

One of the men is an electrician in the day and an usher during the performances. The other is only an usher. The Hebrew Actors' Union was told by the United Hebrew Trades to order the strike if the two ushers were not discharged or made to join the union. It was said also that it was the intention to order similar strikes at all the theatres, one at a time. The ushers joined the union.

Two weeks ago she rented a room from Mrs. Thistle, who lives in the Highland apartments. She had not recovered consciousness late last night.

BURGLAR WITH A SPEAR OUTWITS 16 POLICEMEN

Trousers and $2 Bills Fished Through East Side Windows.

SCENT LOST IN A GRAVEYARD

While the Police Used Lanterns There the Angling Rascal Was Busy Behind the Fence.

There were uncanny doings in the neighborhood of the Bowery, Chrystie, and East Houston Streets early yesterday morning. Shadows moved in the old graveyard of St. Augustine's; burglar alarms went off, windows were gently raised, and a long pole with a knife on the end of it waved in bedrooms like the scythe of Time.

The first intimation of something out of the ordinary came at 3 A. M., when F. M. Munn, a Holmes watchman, on duty in front of the International Tailoring Company's new building, at 91-97 East Houston Street, heard a burglar alarm ringing. He notified Police Headquarters, which rang up the Eldridge Street Station.

Capt. Murtha, with two detectives and twelve reserve policemen, soon arrived in a patrol wagon and entered the tailoring company's building. The first six floors are not yet completed, but for some time business has been going on above the seventh. On the first business floor four rolls of silk valued at $7,000 were found neatly done up in a package. Beside them lay a man's hat and coat, both wet. Apparently the burglar had decamped.

A hasty search to pick up the trail showed that he had escaped by a fire exit leading into the graveyard of St. Augustine's Church next door.

Looking from the upper windows the police could see a shadow dodging behind the gravestones. In another moment the whole force of sixteen policemen was in the cemetery, with lanterns, flashing lights upon moss-covered inscriptions and dates, but never a burglar showed his face.

What followed was even more remarkable. Presumably, when the police rushed into the graveyard the burglar dropped over the fence and escaped into Chrystie Street. Crossing it, he went through an alley to the rear of No. 230, which is occupied by Abraham Wecker as a furnishing store. In the rear of the ground floor is the room of Wecker's servant, Gussie Kessler, who has been in this country only a few weeks. She was awakened by a sound as of some one opening the window, sat up, and looked around. She saw a head and a pair of arms in the gray light at the window. A long pole with a bright steel knife on the end of it was waving about the room.

The girl screamed, and Wecker, who had heard the burglar alarm go off as the window was opened, rushed downstairs with a revolver in each hand. He dashed into the rear yard and was in time to see a man carrying a long pole vault over the fence.

More police. More excitement. The neighborhood was wide awake in a moment. It seemed impossible for the burglar to make any more attempts just then. Nevertheless, when Benjamin Keblan of 127 East Houston Street went to the rear of his apartments, facing on the Chrystie Street yard of Wecker's place, he found the window open. He soon found that two suits of clothes were missing. Keblan couldn't see how the burglar had got at his clothes. This was explained later by the experience of S. Greenberg, who has a clothing store next to Keblan's.

Greenberg was awakened by the opening of the window and the waving of the pole with the knife on the end of it. Greenberg laid still and watched. The spear groped around the room like a great antenna and soon the knife hooked into Greenberg's trousers, which lay on a chair by his bedside. Then the trousers soared toward the window. An arm reached up and pulled them through the bars. Then Greenberg, remembering that there was $2 in the pocket, jumped up and yelled.

When daylight came and the police found the pole with the knife tied to the end of it in a lot in the storm zone they had to admit that they had been outwitted by a burglar who calmly conducted his operations without regard for the sixteen policemen on the other side of the fence. Two burglaries and two attempted burglaries had been committed under their noses.

The pole was taken to the Eldridge Street Station. The knife is of a peculiar pattern, "one not often seen in these parts," said Capt. Murtha.

He is inclined to think that the imported Italian brigands who are being blamed for most recent crimes are guilty in this case also.

STRUGGLED TO TAKE POISON.

Ironworker, Who Will Probably Die, Burned His Wife with Acid.

Policeman Mangan was in front of the house at 322 East Eighty-second Street last evening when he heard Mrs. John Lichtenstein, who lives there, scream:

"Oh, John, don't drink it! Don't kill yourself!"

The policeman rushed in and found Mrs. Lichtenstein and her husband struggling. Before he could reach the pair the man had drunk some carbolic acid and had spilled a lot on his wife, burning her arms severely.

Lichtenstein, who is an ironworker, was taken to the Presbyterian Hospital, where it was said he would probably die. Money troubles are supposed to be responsible for his act.

A NEW KEATS.

Mr. De Selincourt's Edition of the Works of the Lyrist Who "Is With Shakespeare."

THE first question any lover of English poetry will be tempted or moved to ask, upon the appearance of this goodly volume, is why any new Keats at all. With no poet except Shakespeare has contemporary neglect been more fully attempted to be repaired by posthumous research. After Lord Houghton and Buxton Forman, what remains to be found out or said about the poet in the way of new facts? And as for criticism, who has been more profusely criticised, from the "mere maudlin sensibility" of Carlyle to the "He is with Shakespeare" of Matthew Arnold? Why, then, another Keats?

THIS question, which jumps to the lips at the sight of the outside of the volume, it is for the inside of the volume to answer, with the initial presumption against it. Mr. De Selincourt shows himself quite aware of the presumption, although, and very properly, he does not undertake to rebut it by any express apology or pretend to the discovery of "new evidence." He shows himself aware that his work must stand or fall by what it is and not by what he says about it. He treats his predecessors, Woodhouse, Buxton Forman, Sidney Colvin, and the rest with the utmost courtesy, and there is nothing of the controversial in his attitude. He does, indeed, alter the received order and arrangement of the poems from the strictly chronological to the more critical, relegating to the appendix, without regard to their dating, such verses of Keats as do not seem to him to be poetry. This was a needful amendment. Of the received order Mr. Swinburne has remarked, with that cautious moderation of language which so distinguishes him when he is writing critical prose, that "the 'Ode to a Nightingale,' one of the final masterpieces of human work in all times and for all ages, is immediately preceded, in all the editions now [1882] current, by some of the most vulgar and fulsome doggerel ever whimpered by a vapid and effeminate rhymester in the sickly stage of whelphood." Without attempting to verify this diagnosis, one may observe that the ode in question is "immediately preceded," in the present edition, by "The Eve of St. Agnes," which Don Furlhondo cannot possibly be supposed to have had in mind.

BUT the mere rearrangement of the poems, in accordance with a nice critical sense, would not justify a new edition, an edition which runs to "Pp. lxviii., 613," in large octavo, and for which Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co., the American publishers, charge you $2.25. The arrangement and the selection have been perfectly done before, by Mr. Palgrave, in his "Golden Treasury," and the selection is so good, within the limits of Mr. Palgrave's purpose of "Songs and Lyrics," that one is tempted sometimes, in his haste, to say that it comprises all of Keats that is really worth having. Certainly it comprises what is most indispensable and best worth living with. The odes and the sonnets and the shorter narrative poems and the ballads—the lyrics, in a word—are what are "most endeared" in Keats, are the nearly perfect expression of his genius, so far as we know, whatever we may surmise. The place of these things being quite secure, it is about them, his successes, and not about his failures, that curiosity is most excited. How did they come about? How comes it that next to "masterpieces," according to Mr. Swinburne's classification, there are pieces which are so far from being masterpieces that they owe their entire poetical interest to the pieces to which they are adjoined. How happen these hiatuses, these lapses?

THESE questions arise more or less about every poet whose work shows inequality, in other words about every poet. Perhaps Milton is the English poet about whom they least urgently arise, who gives least occasion for them by being most consistently equal to himself. Perhaps Keats is the English poet about whom they most urgently arise. The editor's contribution to his edition, apart from his rearrangement, consists in the eighty-odd pages of introduction, and in the two hundred-odd pages of notes. In the former is a sketch, in bare outline, of Keats's life; in the latter a most minute examination of the poems, line by line, almost word by word, made to trace every expression to its source, if it had any outside the poet's mind. It is a minute inquiry which makes the experienced reader apprehend a "monograph," after the German manner, extensively followed in American institutions of learning, to wit, a certain instrument in writing, produced "in partial fulfillment of the requirements" for some kind of academic degree, and thereafter illegible to all mankind, excepting the examiners and the proofreaders.

BUT one rejoices to ascertain that this is not the case. Mr. De Selincourt is not a German nor, as his patronymic shows, the son of a German. "On the contrary," his patronymic indicates that he is the son of a Frenchman, and his entire work, dated from Oxford, that he is an English scholar. In both these capacities he takes the anti-Teutonic and old-fashioned view that things which are written are written in order that they may be read, and that the reader should not be repelled, but contrariwise attracted. He begins in his introduction by pointing out the conflict between Keats's "heredity" and Keats's "environment." He goes on not only to say but to show that Keats was, to all intents and purposes, "educated by the English poets," having only schoolboy Latin and no Greek; that the diction he was in the way of hearing at home was not only not poetical diction but was cockney commonness, which often rubbed off on his verse to the shame of the better vocabulary he had picked up from his poets, but that his "verbal magic" was derived from his reading of English poets, beginning with Spenser. No doubt it was due, next after his own almost unfailing taste in words and phrases, to his association with men better brought up than himself, notably with Leigh Hunt and Shelley.

HOWEVER that may be, Mr. De Selincourt's tracing of Keats, line by line to his sources, is an undertaking full of interest to the student of English poetry. It is a quest in which it is easy to make a fool of one's self, if one happens to be a fool, to trace fantastic resemblances and impossible analogies. But so far as we have observed Mr. De Selincourt has avoided these pitfalls. He has not often "considered too curiously." His industry is commonly attended with judgment. And so his effort, though the success of it is not exactly of a kind to fill Madison Square Garden, or even Carnegie Hall, with shouting admirers, has yet been a real success. It is complete if he has succeeded in producing the "definitive" edition of Keats. And it seems that it has really done that. M. S.

THE FAR EAST.

Archibald Little's Book on the Countries, Peoples and Resources of the Southeastern Part of Asia.*

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS by

CYRUS C. ADAMS.

MR. LITTLE has been identified with the Far East since early manhood. He has been known to geographers since 1888, when he published the most detailed and best description of the Yangtse gorges that has been written. He took the first steamboat up through those rapids in 1898. His business career began in China forty-six years ago, and he has lived there ever since. This year we hear of him in Western China, where he is engaged in the interests of mining development and steam navigation. He was undoubtedly selected to write this volume in The Regions of the World Series because few men have traveled so extensively as he in the Far East and know it so well. His book was written in the various countries he describes, and while it is primarily geographical, it is saturated from beginning to end with the practical aspects of those countries. How will their natural conditions and resources and the qualities and characteristics of their inhabitants tend to help or hinder their development or the enlargement of their relations with the rest of the world?

This is a very live question to-day, for the Far East has become the focus of world-wide interest. It is too early to answer the question in detail, and naturally Mr. Little does not attempt the task. It is the mission of his book to place before us a clear and succinct account of the human factors and of the physical environment that has helped to shape the character and destiny. The Far East is worthy of the scientific study which savants have given to India and Southern Europe, and more exhaustive description will follow the collection of adequate data. Such thorough treatment of these countries will come some day; and we know of no better introduction to it than the volume now before us.

Those who know of the great enterprises now going forward, especially in China, may best appreciate the timeliness of this book, for it is undoubtedly the best summary yet brought within the compass of a single volume of our knowledge of the five countries of Southeastern Asia—the Chinese Empire, Indo-China, Korea, Siam, and Japan. Everybody has heard of the well-advertised projects, such as the railroad that the Belgians have completed from Peking to Hankow on the Yangtse, the extension of the railroad from Hankow to Canton, for which Americans hold the concession, and the railroad that the Germans have built across Shantung, the most populous province of the empire. Less, however, is generally known of other schemes for further development and of very important work now under way. The attitude of the Chinese toward railroads has changed, and native officials even talk of China taking to herself a large share of railroad extension. France is likely to be the first to reach the "countless number of fertile valleys" on the great limestone plateau of Yunnan, for its railroad from Hanoi to the capital of Yunnan is already under way, and its builders expect to open it to traffic in 1908. The British are trying to make up their minds which is the best of several routes suggested by surveyors and travelers for the railroad between Yunnan and Burma; and a joint British and French syndicate has secured large mining concessions in the El Dorado of Yunnan.

But these are schemes for the development of a far inland province on the border of Tibet. Activity is greater in districts more accessible and nearer the sea. The British have practically ascertained the extent and quality of the vast coal resources in the basins of the Yangtse and Hoang Rivers; and they are giving close attention to the question of trade penetration into all the best parts of China, and especially into the marvelously rich western province of Szechuan. Several parties of their explorers have been sent to the north and west and southwest of Peking to study the condition of the people, their products, and the best routes for railroads to the west. They are ransacking the mountains of Honan and Hupeh for the pass, still elusive, by which they may circumvent the Yangtse gorges and build an easy rail route to the rich, red plain of Szechuan. Everywhere, they say, the educated class is eagerly reading Western books of science that are being turned into Chinese and printed by the thousands at Shanghai; and the maps of these official explorers, printed chiefly by the geographical societies of Great Britain, reveal hundreds of place names that never were seen before.

This eager quest for information is at its height just as this helpful book appears with an orderly and thorough account of the geography of these five countries and of the control exercised by their environment in the distribution of plants and animals, in shaping the activities of the human population. Two-thirds of the space is given to the Chinese Empire because it has by far the larger part of the area and most of the population. China is treated first in its broadest geographical aspects. Seven chapters are then given to the more detailed discussion of China proper, the provinces of the northern basin, or Hoang River, the middle basin or Yangtse River, the intermediate provinces, and the southern basin or West River being considered in turn. Three of these chapters are given to Central China, watered by the Yangtse system, the most populous and important part of the empire. Four chapters follow on the dependencies, Manchuria, Mongolia, Turkestan, and Tibet, and in the four last chapters, Indo-China, Korea, the buffer kingdom, Siam, and the island empire Japan receive succinct but very significant and suggestive treatment. A full index ends the volume.

It would be easy to make such a book very dull reading. A mere enumeration of boundaries, rivers, chief towns, and ports kills interest in the library as well as in the grammar school. But this is not modern geography. The subject is vivified to-day by keeping in view the intimate relation between geography and the history and activities of mankind. Mr. Little has been trained in the modern school, and we may show, by a few illustrations, his way of kindling his pages with interest as well as of filling them with information.

A PART of the low plain of the Chihli Province is turned in the rainy season into extensive marshes and swamps, a fact the Taiping rebels overlooked when they marched on Peking in 1856. Their army of 300,000 men, constantly harassed by the brave militia from the north, could not extricate itself from this maze of marshes and streams and so perished miserably, the last tragedy in a long series that had cost several millions of lives. Mongolia is one of the poorest countries in the world, not because its soil is poor, but for the reason that the mountains, which wall it in, wring dry the rainof ignoring their susceptibilities, and he agrees with Mr. Weale, who wrote a while ago that the experience of Englishmen in China for two centuries has proved conclusively that "not only must the Chinese be considered in all commercial and economical matters, but their wishes and inclinations in the end carry all before them and win the day."

He has great faith in the future of the empire when brawn and muscle are supplemented, as they are certain to be, by the machinery required to carry on great enterprises. The Russians, he says, chose wisely when they built their chief city in Manchuria at Harbin, for it is the natural centre of the province, is in the midst of a magnificent wheat country, and its steam flour mills at the beginning of the war were turning out about 1,000,000 pounds of flour a day.

The author throws considerable new light upon many aspects of China with which we are more or less familiar; his description, for example, of the remarkable Chengtu plateau and its wonderful irrigation works is the best and fullest that has been written.

This plateau is an area of level land, but sloping a little to the south, about 2,800 square miles in extent, once a desert of boulders but now probably the most highly productive and densely populated farming region in the world. It is in the heart of Szechuan. It was reclaimed by the genius of an official who lived two centuries before the Christian era. He dug a wide ditch through the plain. Then by means of boulders incased in bamboo wickerwork he built a wall in the Min River, which stands to this day, and diverts most of the river waters into the ditch, which in turn was subdivided, and the subdivisions were divided again and again, till the whole area was covered with a network of water channels. For centures these ditches were kept in repair, but nothing was done to improve them till modern times. The land is twice as productive as any ordinary irrigated land, and is the costliest farmland in China, much of it being worth $350 an acre.

THE roads through the great river valleys and between the mountain ranges, which have kept China in constant touch with her vast dependencies in the west and north, are the same thoroughfares on which the Mongolian and Tartar invaders traveled when they made their conquests of the Chinese. They overspread North China only to be gradually absorbed in the people whose land they had invaded. The old Chinese physical type is as persistent as Chinese usages and philosophy. It predominates in the mixed offspring of Europeans and Chinese to-day. The mountains of the

THE HORSE.

John Gilmer Speed's Book on the Cultivation and Development of Horses in This Country.*

A TREATISE on the horse, dealing with technical questions of breeding and expressing convictions on subjects about which there has always been and always will be the greatest diversity of opinion among practical horsemen, is sure to win favor with the class whose views it supports and seriously to offend those whose theories it opposes. In this latest book John Gilmer Speed, although professing to present both sides of disputed questions while indorsing one or the other, has already provoked the adverse criticism of many who have made breeding and training their life study. His advocates are likely to be as numerous and possibly as influential. On whichever side the horse lover may stand, he will unquestionably read the work with interest and discuss it with feeling.

Presented in most attractive form and treating the whole subject as thoroughly as the limited size of the volume admits, it will afford entertainment to all those who regard the equine with more than passing interest. Its relation of the history of the horse in this country, introduced by a sketch of its early history prior to its importation here, will not be seriously found fault with save in those deductions which are drawn as to the effects of various influences on the development of the leading types.

Mr. Speed favors strongly the Arab and Barb stock to improve the modern types, and in this provokes the antagonism of a large class that regards the very name of Arab as an anathema. He is a strong advocate of the Morgans and Clay-Arabians and of the Denmarks for saddle purposes, and an unsparing critic of hackneys, Orlofs, and other foreign breeds. The Percheron and Clydesdale he tolerates, and the thoroughbred he commends for its particular purposes, but to the American types alone does he appear to give his unqualified indorsement. Much that he says on this score is indisputable, but many of his theories cannot be accepted so long as the questions touched upon remain in reasonable dispute.

His recital of the history of famous meetings, such as the race between Eclipse and Sir Henry, of Grey Eagle and Wagner, and of Lecompte and Lexington, classics of the turf, will be read with unqualified enjoyment, and his belief in the ability of these horses to more than hold their own with the modern racers

CASPAR WHITNEY'S BOOK.

JUNGLE TRAILS AND JUNGLE PEOPLES. Travel, Adventure, and Observation in the Far East. By Caspar Whitney, author of "On Snow Shoes to the Barren Grounds," &c. 8vo. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.

CASPAR WHITNEY'S admirable book of journeys in Burmah, Siam, Sumatra, and India is a most interesting and informing volume. It is full of observations of life in Southeastern Asia—the life as well of the men and women as of the beasts of the jungle. Mr. Whitney begins with Bangkok, where the humbler world lives in boats and the alien Chinaman or his descendant, the Sino-Chinese, does most of the work. Then he tells how he met the King's mahout, Choo Poh, Lek, and went with him elephant catching—with occasion to note many things of the ways of my lord the elephant and the men of his country. Returning to Bangkok, you read that:

Sampeng is a street of character; it is the Bowery of Bangkok. It is a continuous bazaar from end to end, with many alleylike tributaries leading for the greater number to open-air theatres or to large crowded rooms, where natives squat to gamble and a band sends up uninterrupted melody from the darkness at the rear.

Again:

The Siamese builds his house of one story and on stilts for several reasons. The first, no doubt, is to avoid the unpardonable sin of living in a lower story while an upper one is occupied by other human beings, especially women, who in Siam are not regarded as of much importance. The second, and I should say the most practical if not the most aesthetic, reason is to have a waste gate easy of access for the continually flowing saliva from betel nut chewing and household refuse, which may thus be easily disposed of through the crevices of the openly constructed floor.

Then Mr. Whitney goes after buffalo on the borders of Siam and Burmah, escorted in state by Phra Ram, "governmental chief of the line" separating those two States. Phra Ram takes opportunity to turn the whole affair into a pious pilgrimage to his ancestral home, with incidental revelations vastly more interesting to most readers than the mere tracking of buffalo—though the buffalo also are tracked with all the enthusiasm and patience in life.

Traveling in the interior of the Malay peninsula Mr. Whitney encounters the "Sakai," or tree dwellers, users of the WEYMAN'S NEW BOOK.

"Starvecrow Farm" Is a Story of English Life in the Georgian Era*

THAT most dependable story teller, Mr. Stanley Weyman, has chosen for this romance not a French but a Georgian English setting. The absence of the frills of Latin chivalry does not, however, deprive the tale of the qualities which distinguish Mr. Weyman's work from that of the herd of his imitators. It goes—goes a-cantering and takes you along with it.

The action begins with an elopement—a heavy chaise crossing the sands ahead of the racing tide, and in the chaise a very interesting and willful young woman and a young man, who presently turns out to be a pitiful villain. Most of the later action occurs at an English inn, (with a sharp-tongued landlady,) but it shifts now and again to the highway outside, to a wretched hovel, (the house of Starvecrow Farm,) to a smugglers' den, and to Kendal Jail. It is the willful young woman who goes to Kendal Jail, by the way, and makes there a very pretty (if incongruous) picture, with skirts tucked up, sweeping out the prison yard. For Miss Henrietta Damer, sister of Sir Charles, has run away with a blackguard on the very eve of what was to have been her marriage with Capt. Clyne, a stern, elderly widower, late Captain in his Majesty's Navy.

The blackguard not only has a wife already, but is wanted for radicalism and rioting besides. And Capt. Clyne is very much hurt and very haughty. Matters are complicated by the venoms and jealousies of a handsome, dark, tempestuous gypsy girl called Bess. Bess has heard of what the reds did to the aristocrats in France, and she has a notion that she would like herself to grind the faces and trample the necks of a few pretty golden-haired British aristocrats—especially Miss Henrietta Damer. There is a chaplain who is a most Weymanesque invention and loves Miss Damer, there is a wicked squire-parson, and a runner from Bow Street—after the blackguard, of course. With that material you may trust the author to make the best of its possibilities for adventures, misunderstandings, dramatic incidents, surprises, conversations, scenes, rages, tears, and the rest of the things which tickle the romance reader's palate.

A. E. J. LEGGE'S NOVEL.

THE FORD. By Arthur E. J. Legge. Pp. 338. 12mo. Cloth. New York: John Lane Company.

"THE FORD" is not a commonplace novel. It displays close observation and an unusual knowledge of life, and tells its story in excellent style, terse and graceful. The characters are drawn with vigor, and altogether the book is quite out of the ordinary in both its plot and its workmanship.

While it is interesting, however, it fails to compel interest. It is too skippable for so well conceived and well written a tale. The hero is rather wooden, in spite of his many fine qualities; all our admiration is perforce given to the Sir Launcelot of the novel, the gravest fault of which is a painfully pervasive moral miasma. The plain word with which old Mrs. Carlyle characterized the women of Wilhelm Meister is as well merited by the ladies of "The Ford," while as for the men—even the impeccable Ralph regards a woman's weakness as a man's opportunity; and the rest—well, the less said about them the better. The book is not salacious, not erotic: it means to be a straightforward love story, but it does "leave a bad taste in one's mouth," and is likely to bring a not unfrequent blush to the cheek of the middle aged!

It holds many just views forcibly put. Paul Gleddayne is the protagonist of the story, "a mixture of a saint and a blackguard. * * * always in love with some one else's wife." Since his vices have left him before he appears on the stage, we should find him altogether admirable but for the frank revelation of a shameful earlier career. His ripe and gentle wisdom, his unselfishness, his large tolerance, are all singularly attractive. We think ill of the author for mingling so much of "the blackguard" with traits so rare and fine, as well as for permitting us but a grudging admiration for a book of real literary charm and clear intelligence.

A WARTIME ROMANCE.

THE INTERNATIONAL SPY. Being the Secret History of the Russo-Japanese War. By Allen Upward. ("Monsieur A. V.") Illustrated by F. X. Chamberlain. 12mo. New York: G. W. Dillingham Company.

THE audacious and ingenious "A. V." has spun another of his yarns about the subterranean parts of world wars and policies. This time, for fear his air of verisimilitude may mislead the unwary, he takes pains to warn his readers that his book is, as Mr. Shaw says, "a fiction." The famous episode of Rojestvensky's battle in the night with the fisher fleet on the Dogger Banks is the occasion and climax of the present narrative—one which has already appeared in sections in a magazine. By his veracious account, "A. V." is employed by Queen Alexandra to assist Empress Dagmar to prevent the embroiling of Russia and Britain. On the other side is "A. V.'s" old crony, the German Emperor, who is plotting industriously to bring about just that particular embroilment. "A. V." repairs to St. Petersburg, where he meets another secret agent, a lovely Russian Countess. He is drugged and kidnapped, but manages, nevertheless, (in the uniform of an officer of the Third Section,) to cross Siberia and convey in the innocent form of a cigarette a message from the Czar to the Emperor.

Also he falls in love with a Japanese lady. Then he returns to St. Petersburg, has further adventures with the beautiful Countess, foils the Russian police, executes a conspirator, deceives the head of the German secret service, and manages, in disguise, to converse even with his old friend William II. without any suspicion of his identity crossing the monarch's mind. William it is who sends him with a submarine to lurk amid the fishers of the North Sea and alarm the Russians into firing into these peaceful persons. Lord Charles Beresford (it is expected) will do the rest with the indignation of England to back him. "A. V." goes with every intention of betraying William's confidence and saving the encounter. But there is another submarine before him—and the Countess in it, of course.

LIFE IN THE ZOO.

SA-ZADA TALES. By W. A. Fraser. Illustrated by Arthur Heming. Cloth, 12mo. Scribners. $2.

A NOVEL sort of beast book is this, where the prisoners of a Zoo, among them Bagheela the tiger, Pardus the panther, and Hansor the Laugher or hyena, gather peaceably together and at the inspiration of Sa-Zada, their keeper, rehearse their pasts.

Undoubtedly a leopard cannot change his spots, but we are almost convinced that a man can get inside a leopard's skin and tell us how those spots feel. Mr. Fraser at least can tell us how the famous jungle people and other wild folk, both of the "blood kind" and of the "peace kind," feel about Zoo life, and what were their habits and eccentricities before their capture.

Not one of these "dwellers in Animal Town" but has had some exciting adventure, and the author's knowledge of natural history, his skill in story telling, and his humorous sympathy, enable him to thrill the lover of forest creatures and even to thrall jaded readers who may scorn all popular nature books.

"LOHENGRIN."

THIS is the third of a series of romances founded on the themes of the grand operas, of which "The Valkyries," by E. F. Benson, and "Siegfried," by S. Baring-Gould, were the first. "Lohengrin," (L. C. Page & Co., $2,) is written by Bernard Capes, author of "The Lake of Wine," "Diana Please," "A Castle in Spain," &c. The illustrations, in black and white, are by Sarcadi Pogany, and fancifully, yet not without plenty of vigor and action, depict the dramatic incidents of the legend, which is repeated in description and dialogue and dramatic succession in the form of the modern historical romance. Often it is apparent that the author has drawn his descriptive parts from familiarity with the theatre rather than from acquaintance of the wild region about Zantvliet. But this is done with fine imagination and with an artistic talent for visualization.

Thomas Williams.

Campion & Co. of Philadelphia will publish immediately "The Life and Speeches of Thomas Williams, (of Pittsburg,) Orator, Statesman, and Jurist, (1806-1872,) a Founder of the Whig and Republican Parties," by Burton Alva Konkle, author of "The Life and Times of Thomas Smith, 1745-1809." The work will be in two volumes, and will deal, as the dates in the title show, with the period immediately preceding the American civil war and during that conflict, with Presidential letters now published for the first time. An introduction has been written for it by Attorney General Knox, United States Senator from Pennsylvania.

THE NEW NOVEL

By George Barr McCutcheon

Author of "Beverly of Graustark," Etc.

NEDRA

"Nedra" is a spirited narrative concerning two young lovers who detest the idea of being married in Chicago according to all the rules and regulations of their fashionable circle, and accordingly decide to elope. They get as far as New York on their way to Manila, when an accident to the cab in which they are riding throws an exasperating obstacle in their path, and though they catch their steamer the preliminary difficulty proves symbolical—they get into one hobble after another. Moreover, the object for which they elope is never carried out, and this without their ever having even a ghost of a quarrel! This is as much as to say that Mr. McCutcheon has a very ingenious way with him and knows how to achieve the unexpected.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

I.

WHEN one is beginning to talk of the children's holiday books there is difficulty in deciding which one to take up first. Shall it be a boy's book, a girl's book, a serious one or a frivolous one, or which one of all is the most interesting? In looking through the first arrivals this year there is no doubt as to which this important first one is. It is "Little Princess," by Frances Hodgson Burnett, (Scribner's, $2,) with illustrations by Ethel Franklin Betts. "The Little Princess" is "The Whole Story of Sara Crewe, Told for the First Time," a delightful story told as only Mrs. Burnett could tell it, bound in the prattiest of covers, and the colored pictures so charming that they are almost as good as the story, which is saying a great deal.

Mrs. Burnett, in the preface, tells how the book came to be written. There is always, she says, in every story a great deal more than is ever written. So when she came to make a play from the book which told the first part of the history of Sara Crewe she found "three acts full of things and girls who had been at Miss Minchin's school whom she had never known." Then, when the children of New York liked the play of "The Little Princess" and laughed and cried over it, the publishers asked Mrs. Burnett to rewrite the story of Sara Crewe, including the new parts in the play, which she did, adding still more of the little girl's history, which had been bidden all the time somewhere far back in her brain.

The result is a story which every little girl will read many times, which her papa and mamma will read, too, and possibly the brothers of the family, though it is not always possible to prophesy about boys. There are tears in the book, also many smiles, many beautiful thoughts, and all the fascinating make-believes, as well as real mysteries that any little girl could desire. There is a delightful ending, and in the pictures the little princess, or Sara Crewe, looks as every one knows she must have looked.

Many lands have been called upon for stories for Esther Singleton's "The Wild Flower Fairy Book," (Dodd, Mead & Co., $2.) There are a couple of dozen of them, altogether, coming from Hindu and Arabia, from Japan and China, from Norway, Denmark and different European

In "The Child's Dickens" the stories of "David Copperfield" and "Oliver Twist" are retold by Annie Douglas Severance, (American Book Company.) The stories are much condensed, the two being told in 160 pages. A small portrait of Dickens, surrounded by many smaller Oliver Twists, forms a part of the decorations of the green linen cover. A very nice little book for very nice little boys is Burges Johnson's "Rhymes of Little Boys." (Crowell, $1.) The small boys either talk themselves in the rhymes or are talked about. Many of the rhymes have already appeared in different magazines. The illustrations are confined to the title page and inside the two covers, but they are worth while—small boys and sunflowers in colors. The cover is good, a fine, red plaid gingham, over boards.

Companion volumes, intended to give the little people an idea of the manners and customs of their small cousins across the water, are "Our Little French Cousin," by Blanche McManus, and "Our Little Korean Cousin," by H. Lee M. Pike. (L. C. Page & Co., each 60 cents.) They are entertainingly written, and with pictures.

INDIAN Stories," retold from St. Nicholas, come from the pens of different writers, and are now brought together for the first time. There are many illustrations, and the greater number of them are sewed in to add to the serviceable qualities of the book. This is the first volume of a series of historical stories. (Century Company, 65 cents.) There are 179 pages.

"The Runaway Donkey and Other Rhymes," by Emilie Poulsson, illustrated by L. J. Bridgeman, (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company, $1.50,) is a good sized square book of 81 pages of heavy paper, large type, and many pictures. Most of the rhymes are about animals, and an interesting one is the history of the coasting experiment of two little girls who hitch the donkey to the sled and try to make him drag them up the hill. Miss Poulsson is the author of the popular "Finger Plays" for the kindergarten.

A little larger than the donkey book is that containing the history of "The Yellow Cat and Some Friends," by Grace V. R. Dwight, illustrated by Edith Dimock. (Appleton, $1.50.) These are different stories, in prose, very nice stories, too, and every child will be delighted with the pictures.

"Forest Land" is another of the thick, square books of fine typographical ap-black. The Jumblerun, Blether, Shivree, and Skerwall are a few of the many.

THERE are many familiar names among the authors of the first girls' books of the season which have come in, and they promise good times for all girl readers. Miss Alcott is again to the fore this year with two large, comfortable volumes. One of these is "Under the Lilacs," the illustrations, and of course good ones, are by Alice Barber Stephens. "Jack and Jill" is pictured by Harriet Roosevelt Richards. (Little, Brown & Co., $2 each.)

Of course there is one of the "Five Little Pepper" books. Ben Pepper this time, and Mrs. Sidney has made him as interesting as others of the Pepper family. There is a great deal about Christmas in the book. It begins with Christmas shopping; there is an accident in which the children assist a rich—and most people say cross—old lady and are invited to help her pick out presents for a family of poor children; there is the home of the poor children themselves when the big box of presents arrives. All sorts and kinds of other interesting things happen, and finally Ben goes into business. (Lothrop Publishing Company, $1.50.)

Many nice girls and boys fill Anna Chapin Ray's new book "Sidney: Her Summer on the St. Lawrence," (Little, Brown & Co., $1.50.) The young people find themselves in a little French village and have all sorts and kinds of good times. There is a race on logs in a shallow river where Janet and Paul pole themselves along, which is particularly jolly. Sidney, the heroine of the book, is a very "good sort" of girl; there is an invalid young man cousin around whom the narrative of the story is woven; there is pretty and self-sufficient Judith who comes out in the end a much nicer girl than she promised; there are the little people, Ruth and Bungay, to add to the fun; there is a satisfactory end and promises of more good times in the future. The pictures are by Alice Barber Stephens.

Mrs. Candice Wheeler is a new writer in the field of children books, though well known outside. "Double Darling and the Dream Spinner," (Fox, Duffield & Co., $1.50,) her book of this season, is the story of a very dear little girl, her good times, and the stories the "dream spinner" told her. It is a volume of 167 pages with illustrations by Dora Wheeler Keith.

A PLEASANT way for any boy or girl to get acquainted with the sixteenth century is to read "The Queen's Page," by Cornelia Baker, with illustrations by Fanny Y. Cory. (Bobbs, Merrill & Co.) Pedro de Valesco and his twin sister Petronilla are as beautiful as two children ought to be, and as healthy and happy. They are ten when the story starts and a hired man. The scene is the West—among the Rocky Mountains—and the time 1853. Capt. Richard Manning of Kentucky is traveling to California with his family and servants including a negro cook. They have a "prairie schooner" drawn by oxen and an "ambulance" drawn by mules. Some of them are mounted on horses. The ox wagon stops with the elders at a certain place for repairs. The young people going ahead with the lighter part of the gear are cut off by a landslide, which shuts them in upon a table land with steep sides all around. They hunt, find an ancient Indian village, rescue an aged medicine man or priest (who has just been bitten by a rattlesnake,) have a touch of mountain fever, (to show how fever should be treated), and at last find a way down from their "Island in the Air," and are almost captured by Navajos. They are just standing off these redskins for the last time in fact when a bugle sings on the breeze and Uncle Sam's cavalry gallops to the rescue.

CONSTRUCTIVE DEMOCRACY.

THE meaning of this term is given in the opening paragraphs in his book on the subject by William E. Smythe:

> Constructive democracy is the genius of the people engaged in building their institutions. This creative spirit finds expression at various times through every school of thought, from the most conservative to the most radical. Its achievement is the net result of agitation, discussion, and popular action crystallized into law. It is the common sense of the people registered in the event. While neither of the historic parties in the United States is in any peculiar sense the custodian of the constructive principle, it is, nevertheless, true that in a republic political results can only be achieved by means of party organization.

The author outlines a programme for constructive progress. He discusses Socialism, "The Taming of Monopoly," "The Surplus Man," "The Unfinished Republic," and in his introduction describes the "Party of the Future," and writes:

> It would seem that three great parties will inevitably share the allegiance of the American electorate in the fateful times which are upon us. There will be a party of conservatism with its stronghold in the United States Senate. * * * There will be a revolutionary party. * * * There will be a party which is neither conservative nor revolutionary, but radical as compared with conservatism, and evolutionary as compared with the spirit of revolution. And it is this latter party which will surely prevail in the near future, leading the nation through a course of scientific preparation for a higher expression of human brotherhood in society and government, because it is this party which will be the best interpreter of contemporaneous events.

The book bears the imprint of the Macmillan Company.

Rae's "Theory of Capital."

The original work of which "The Sociological Theory of Capital," by John Rae, M. A., edited by Prof. Charles Whitney Mixter of the University of Vermont, is a reprint, was published in Boston in RUSKIN.

A New Volume in the Complete Edition of his Works Edited by Cook and Wedderburn.

BESIDES "Sesame and Lilies," which gives the title to the eighth volume of Messrs. E. T. Cook and Alexander Wedderburn's new edition of Ruskin, (Longmans,) the volume contains "The Ethics of the Dust," "The Cestus of Aglaia," "The Crown of Wild Olive," "The Queen of the Air," "The Story of Arachne," and "The Tortoise of Aegina"—all written or composed primarily for oral delivery—besides a large number of letters and extracts from diaries which form a most valuable addition to Ruskinsna. Nearly all this material was written, in original or in completed form, between 1864 and 1870, a period covering the interval between the death of Ruskin's father snd his entering the Slade Professorship at Oxford. But not only should Ruskin's mental state—sad yet hopeful, still fanciful yet yearning toward the useful and practical—be borne in mind by readers of this volume, but also tbe intellectual condition of the times in wbich its pages were penned.

From Greek art and Egyptian mythology the great art critic, who would be accepted as a political economist, passes to female education, the duties of soldiers, the treatment of domestics, and the virtues of co-operative Socialism. He was, indeed, well worthy of the term which he applied to himself at this time, a man of "incurably desultory character"; still his uncertainties of vision and his meanderings in the realm of sociology were never quite conclusive—even to himself. Better than his admiring contemporaries, and as well as his critics of forty years later, he understood that what he called the "vital truths of economic, social, and ethical modern England," savored of the "paradoxical and tbe impracticable." His theories were in advance of public opinion; his suggestions for applying them untried or long since exploded.

To persons who are already familiar wlth the essays in these volumes the added letters, whether public and controversial or personal and explanatory, will prove a most absorbing series of illuminating human documents. Through his father's desth Ruskin inherited £120,000, together with other property, including art treasures valued at £10,000 more. A few days after, realizing that he had now an abundance with which he might carry out his most fantastic dresms for revolutionizing English art snd reforming the British body politic, he wrote to Prof. Acland of Oxford:

> You never have had—nor, with all your medical experience, have probably never seen—the loss of a father who would have sacrificed his life for his son, and yet who forced his son to sacrifice his life to him, and yet sacrifice it in vain.

Those who are familiar with "Modern Painters" will cry out against this spalling injustice, and yet many things are explained by it which have so far remained hidden in "Sesame and Lilies."

Luther Burbank.

First among all other things, Luther Burbank is unique among men in his knowledge of nature and in his manipulations and interpretation of her forces. Other men have been plant breedera and have produced remarkable results in improved fruits and flowers. They have achieved a merited reputation; indeed, in some cases this high reputation has passed on into a certain measure of fame. But Mr. Burbank has not only created plants and improved them upon a colossal scale, but he has, at the same time studied nature with infinite patience and skill, observing her manifestations, analyzing her laws, and defining and interpreting her functions. His life work has been primarily twofold in its sweep: First, embracing the widest possible service to the world, and, second, accomplishing this service under the most exacting and persistent adherenca to scientific truth. He is, in his department of life, scientist and philosopher and plant breeder and horticulturist bonnd into one.

Thus writes W. S. Harwood in his account of the life nnd work of the well-known plant breeder, Luther Burbank, which is published by the Macmillan Company under the title, "New Creations in Plant Life." Following the brief account of Mr. Burbank's career down to the present time, Mr. Harwood has a chapter on his methods of work in general. He then passes on to a discussion of the individual creations of the breeder, describing the trees created by him, the amaryllis and the poppy, the potato and "pomato," illies, plums and prunes, tbe "Shasta" daisy, cacti, breeding plants for perfumes, &c. Thera are also chapters on breeding and grafting and the commercial aspect of the work; a description of a day with Mr. Burbank, and his personality. The volume is profusely illustrated from photographs.

The Hotel Red Book.

A book of much value, especially to travelers, is the Hotel Red Book, tha 1905 edition of which is just out. This book contains a list, not of all the hotels in the United States and Cannda, but of the best hotels, arranged in alphabetical order, with the regular prices charged at each, and of many of tbe best hotels in other countries. Travel, every one knows, is a great educator, but if ona cannot travel actually he can educate himself to some extent by studying this Hotel Red Book and supplementing his reading with a guide book. And if he does travel, he will travel more comfortably if he studies the Red Book before he starts, or as he goes, for he will find a copy of it almost everywhere.

LINCOLN DEBATES.

PROF. ARCHIBALD LEWIS BOUTON of the New York University has prepared a volume of "The Lincoln and Douglas Debates," together with Lincoln's address at Cooper Institute, which Henry Holt & Co. will issue immediately. Prof. Bouton has made the selections for the sake of their "indisputable value" both as historical documents and as masterpieces of the art of debate. "As a teacher of argumentation," he says, "he has felt the lack of available material illustrative of the thrust and parry of actual debate, and designs this volume to supply what is almost a total lack among edited specimens of srgument."

Three speeches of the seven debates of the campaign are printed entire—those made at Freeport, Galesburg, and Alton. Their subject matter includes the essential issues of the campaign. The debate at Ottawa, the first of the series and one of those most familiar, has been omitted from the volume, because the editor believes it to be "the least definite in its presentation of the essential issues." The debates are prefsced by Lincoln's speech of June 16, 1858, at Springfield, Ill., with which he opened the campaign, and supplemented by the Cooper Institute address of February, two years later, "as Lincoln's ultimate and perfected statement of the anti-slavery argument."

American Art Annual.

The fifth volume of this annual, edited by Florence N. Levy, is about to be issued by the American Art Annual, 20 West Thirty-fourth Street, New York City. The special feature is a list showing what has been accomplished in the various cities for civic improvement. There will also be pictures of several new buildings, with interior as well as exterior views. As usual, The Annual contains tbe reports of the various museums, condensed. Following the biographical directory of painters, illustrators, and sculptors, is a list of architects, and another of dealers in the fine arts, as well as a directory of lectures on art. The reports of paintings sold st auction in the United States during 1903-05 have been srranged alphabeticsily by the artists' names. The editor, in her note, touches on various topics, including the work of museums in spreading the love of art. She writes:

> There are many ways in which the museums can co-operate in spresding a knowiedge and appreciation of art. In the smaller cities the library is the centre of all intellectual life, and in each library there is usually a hall that can be used for exhibition purposes. Here is a field where loans from the museums would be gratefully received. Two steps along these lines have already been taken. During the period of its annual exhibition in 1904 the Carnegie Institute of Pittsburg lent twenty important paintings from its permanent collection to the University of Kansas. * * * The Detroit Museum of Art has arranged a group of Oriental art objects from the Stearns collection which it is prepared to lend for exhibition purposes to librarics and other responsible institutions. The reproduction of paintings belonging to the permanent collection of the Carnegie Institute and the circulation of these photographs in the public schools of Pittsburg has led to a better appreciation of the originals.

Practical Problems of Life.

This is the theme of Dr. Henry van Dyke's new volume of "Essays in Application," which Charles Scribner's Sons are publishing. He deals with such subjects as "Ruling Classes in a Democracy," "Publicomania," "The Powers That Be," "The Flood of Books," "Books, Literature, and the People," "Christianity and Current Literature," "The Church in the City," "The Creative Ideal of Education," "The School of Life," &c. He has taken up the different topics from the point of view of "one who wishes to he guided in every day judgments and affairs by a sane idealism. The book makes no claim to be a defense or even a statement of a complete system of philosophy or faith. It is simply a collection of essays in application." Dr. van Dyke writes in his preface:

> The forces that impel action reside in temperament. The ideals and convictions that guide it are hidden in the mind and heart. A man moves slowly or swiftly, he does his work weakly or strongly, according to the energy that is in him. But the direction of his life, this way or that way, follows the unseen influence of what he admires and loves and believes in. It is not easy to take stock of these controlling ideals and convictions and estimate them at their true value. It is harder atill to arrange and order them in a system—clear, logical, consistent—a philosophy of life. * * * And if, as I believe, life is tha test of thought, rather than thought the test of lifa, we should be able to get light on the real worth of a man's theories, ideals, beliefs, hy looking at the shape which they would give to human existence if they wera faithfully applied.

BILLY.

FROM its capitally descriptive cover to its very last word "The Coming of Billy," by Margaret Westrup, is for once in a way a delightful nnd refreshing contrast to the sensations and problems that make up so large a part of present-day fiction, and is well worthy of a place in the not very lengthy list of classics in child study. Billy is not at all like the ordinary property child thnt appears now and then in stories about grown-ups, plays his little part, and than disappears. Billy holds tha centre of the stage in thia book, and any grown-ups that it contains serve merely as tha accessories in the development of Billy's character and attainments. The best of it is that Billy does not grow up, at least not within the limits of the story.

Billy is a very little boy who is sent home from India to grow up in the care of his five maiden aunts in a small English village. Aunt Agatha is typically stiff and prim and opinionated, Aunt Primrose, sweet nnd lovable, and the three intermediates, just echoes of Sister Agatha, not even designated by names of their own. As their knowledge of boys was entirely summed up in more or less hazy recollections of the childhood of their brother, Billy's father, the small boy's arrival was the occasion of much excitement and of minute planning as to what should be done with him. Aunt Agatha went to the station to meet him with the governess's cart, expecting to hold him on her lap and console him for homesickness, but she found a sturdy offish, capable little tad who systematically resisted both then and ever after all attempts to "bahby" him and played the gentleman to the best of his ability.

Subsequent happenings all hinge on the irresistible mixture in Billy of the born gentleman and the ineradicable boy, and the utter inability of all but Primrose among the aunts to comprehend him or reach the really homesick, yearning little heart concealed under his very thorny exterior manner. By implication Primrose's superior sympathy and insight is explained by her being youthful enough to engage in a romance with the curate, the happy conclusion of which, by the way, is brought about by a wonderfully ingenious plan of Billy's and almost at the cost of his life.

Billy's pranks, Billy's troubles, and Billy's disciplining at the hands of his well-meaning but inexperienced aunties make up a delightfully humorous story that is told with a wholly charming grace man; the Bach volume, of Ludwig Ziemsen; Frederick the Great, of Ferdinand Schrader; and Maria Theresa, of W. D. Von Horn. Each book, which in size is a 16mo, and bound in green cloth with a portrait medallion of the subject stamped in gold, has four or five half-tone illustrations and a table of the principal events of the period, arranged chronologically.

The volumes to follow these will be: "Jeanne d'Arc, the Maid of Orleans"; "Mozart," "Beethoven," and "William Tell."

A FOX EPIC.

OF the very interesting animal who is the hero of these adventures, Mr. Roberts says that "the incidents in his career are not only consistent with the known characteristics and capacities of the fox family, but there is authentic record of them all in the accounts of careful observers. Every one of these experiences has befallen some red fox in the past, and may befall other red foxes in the future." No matter how extraordinary the things you read afterward, therefore, you may not doubt their entire foxiness. Any disposition to skepticism merely argues your own ignorance of the animal whom Mr. Roberts and the ancients agree in making the astutest of all the beasts. To be sure, Mr. Roberts confesses that he has combined in his particular red fox the many inventions of a vast number of real foxes. He is, in short, the epic fox. As to the emotions and mental processes which he ascribes to his hero, Mr. Roberts warns you not to consider these processes as human processes transferred without authority. Man, he reminds you, is an animal, and many of his processes—animal processes—are as fairly the heritage and right of foxes as—of professors of polite letters.

In the course of his life, from early puppyhood to his prime—all carefully traced here—red fox is represented as doing many things which on the face of them no hookworm would believe a fox ever did. He outwits dogs, of course, by all sorts of ingenious devices—that is a fox's specialty; he hunts skillfully in wood and field and barnyard—that is his profession. But he makes, also, a study of men. He engages in a contest of wits with Jahez Smith, a fellow with primitive hunting instincts, and observes with curiosity the ways of a creature of the new school of guniess hunters called Boy—obviously intended for Mr. Roberts himself. Boy goes about the woods to see things—not to shoot them—and red fox takes note of him as an oddity, and not

The New York Times
SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS
LITERARY SECTION OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 21, 1905.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

THURSDAY of this week was the three hundredth anniversary of the birth in Cheapside, London, of the famous writer and wise physician Sir Thomas Browne. It is probably true, as one of the London literary journals suggests, that the year 1905 has been, thus far, rather too prolific of literary anniversaries and their celebrations. Too much of this sort of thing is not likely to increase the multitude's reverence for literature. But there are many English writers of comparative worth whom we could afford to forget rather than Sir Thomas Browne. There was a celebration Thursday in old Norwich, where Browne dwelt and wrote and practiced medicine full forty years. A bronze statue was unveiled, and Lord Avebury, appropriately both a man of letters and student of nature, delivered an address. Sir Thomas Browne was extolled by Coleridge and greatly admired by Charles Lamb. He was a curious product of his age, a strange combination of wisdom and liberality, narrowness and superstition. His "Religio Medici" is a book the critics of literature have found it hard to classify and analyze. Humorist, idealist, and philosopher Browne was, with be published to-morrow in the Sunday edition of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DR. EDWARD STANWOOD'S "Life of James Gillespis Blaine" comes from the house of Houghton, Mifflin & Co. The biographer is convinced that "no man who has borne a conspicuous part in the political history of the United States has had a personality more interesting." He credits his subject with a "keen, active mind, well trained by early education and ripened by long experience," as well as "a strong and comprehensive grasp of public questions" and an "unwavering devotion to principles." The political skill of Mr. Blaine he probably does not overestimate. In the conduct of political controversy and the management of a canvass Blaine was certainly a master. It is also true that he had a multitude of devoted followers to the last. He inspired affection and confidence because of his fine presence, his agreeable manners, his power to make friends, his marvelous memory of names and faces. These qualities, it seems to us, should be enumerated in a candid estimate of the famous Maine politician before his "grasp of public questions" and his "devotion to principles." Dr. Stanwood believes that some of the "many interesting problems" the career of Blaine offers to students of political history must still be left for the historians of another generation. He does not, therefore, put forward his book as a collection of "Final Memorials," like Talfourd's biography of Lamb. Dr. Stanwood frankly admits that his own opinion of Mr. Blaine "will undoubtedly be regarded as too much biased by personal friendship to be accepted." His last word is that Mr. Blaine was actuated by high motives, inspired by lofty patriotism, and "obedient to the promptings of a sensitive conscience." In the notorious matter of the Little Rock and Fort Smith bond purchase the biographer holds that "only those who can believe nothing good of Mr. Blaine will maintain that he was not entitled to a verdict of absolute innocence." But he Sandy McGee" will go down into history in the same delightful category as Old John Naps of Greece, and Henry Pimpernell. "His Answer to Her Letter," communicated through Truthful James, has less of the touch of inspiration, while "Her Last Letter" was an afterthought, written, we believe, as lately as 1898. "Her Letter" belongs to 1870, almost the beginning of Harte's career. The book is a beautiful example of typography, and Mr. Keller's skillfully executed pictures are full of the true Bret Harte humor. Perhaps it was a trifle bold to attempt to portray "the man who shot Sandy McGee." Mr. Keller does as well with that subject as might have been expected. But the young lady, though her countenance varies greatly from stage to stage of her experience, is always charming. Truthful James we accept unhesitatingly. Here is the very associate of Bill Nye and chronicler of that famous break-up of the society upon the Stanislaus. The fashions in women's dress of the early 70's are attractively represented.

ANOTHER of the new gift books is the "Tales from Shakespeare," by Charles and Mary Lamb. There are, indeed, two new editions of this lesser classic at hand. The Oxford edition (Henry Frowde) is but an every day sort of book, compared with the other, but it contains sixteen illustrations from more or less famous paintings, and is a handy volume, well-printed, neatly bound. The other is sumptuous in gilding and decorative work, has a large octavo page, reproductions of portraits of Charles and Mary Lamb in the National Portrait Gallery, London, and twenty full-page pictures by Norman M. Price, printed in colors. The illustrator of the Lambs' "Tales" is, of course, an interpreter of Shakespeare. Mr. Price's pictures are to be judged only from a high standard. But they suffer nothing by comparison; they are praiseworthy alike as pictures and as illustrations. They have original force and delicate imagination. Beatrice and Imogen are wisdom of an amiable philosopher and the gayety of a humorist. You may take his book as a guide to what one should see in and about London and not go wrong, though few of us, alas! are likely ever to see all that Mr. Howells saw, without Mr. Howells's eyes. The Harpers publish his book, and it contains the pictures from the magazine.

HOW THE POOR LIVE.

A PAMPHLET of absorbing interest is "Family Monographs," by Elsa G. Herzfeld, with a preface by Elsie Clews Parsons, Ph. D., Lecturer on Sociology at Barnard College. This may be obtained at the rooms of the Charities Organization and at Brentano's. It contains the intimate history, in a term of years, of twenty-four families dwelling in the tenement houses of the middle west side, Manhattan. It enters into every detail of their lives, and has the minuteness of detail Daniel Defoe aimed at, with, of course, no effort whatever in the direction of literary art. It is not, in fact, a literary work in any sense, or a "book" in any but the most restricted sense. It is a tract.

It contains the most vivid portrayal of the lives of the poor in this metropolis that we have ever seen. We may note in it that in many respects the foibles, prejudices, and superstitions of the people described differ in only few details from those of people not nearly so poor. But the cruel routine of poor life is here set forth without moralizing, and in such a way that its presentment is bound to do good. The evils so clearly explained sometimes suggest their own remedies. We commend Miss Herzfeld's pamphlet to the consideration of all persons interested in the sane administration of charitable relief and the cause of social reform.

HORRORS OF WAR.

A Wounded Russian Officer's Book—A History of Papacy.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1905.]

LONDON, Oct. 20.—Leonid Andrieff's remarkable book, extracts from which appeared some months ago in the Sunday edition of THE NEW YORK TIMES, under the title of "Crimson Laughter," is soon to appear here in an English translation called "The Red Laugh." Andrieff is a young Russian officer who was sent home from the seat of war in Manchuria, with both legs gone and his mind unhinged by the horrors he had witnessed. His book, made up of fragments of his diary, is said to be a remarkable study of the psychology of war. Fisher Unwin will publish the translation.

John Murray announces "The History of Papacy in the Nineteenth Century," in three volumes, written by Dr. Fredrik Nielsen, Bishop of the Established Church of Denmark (Lutheran) at Aalborg, in Jutland. Two volumes are ready in a translation by Dr. Arthur James Mason of Pembroke College, Cambridge, bringing the story down to the death of Pius IX.

The same publisher is preparing "The Afrikander Land," by Archibald Colquhoun, and, also, in a limited edition, the "Triumphs" of Petrarch, translated into English by Henry Boyd. It is said that this Petrarch edition will mark a new departure in artistic typography. The type will be shaped after the letters of the most accomplished scribes of the early centuries. The paper will be made after an old Italian formula.

Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co have in press a "History of English Rationalism in the Nineteenth Century," by Alfred W. Binn, whose work on the Greek philosophers was published in 1882.

The New Head Master of Eton, the Rev. Edward Lyttleton, has a volume of studies on "The Sermon on the Mount" nearly ready for publication by the Longmans.

The Cambridge University Press will soon publish a volume of essays on four plays by Euripides, the "Andromache," "Helen," "Heraklee," and "Orestes," written by Dr. A. W. Verrall. The book is a sequel to "Euripides the Rationalist" published two years ago.

Prof. Vambery has a book with John Murray, entitled "Our Culture Bearers in Central Asia," which is said to be a vindication of British policy in the East. W.

Newport in Pictures.

Beginning with the "Climate" of Newport, in her book on "Newport—Our Social Capital," which the J. B. Lippincott Company publish, Mrs. John King Van Rensselaer describes in the following chapters "Society," "Bellevue Avenue," "The Cliff Walk," "The Ocean Drive and Kindred Spurs," "The Beautiful Harbor of Newport," "The History and First Settlement," "On the Verge of the Revolution," "Newport During the War," "British and French Occupation of Newport," "Religious Founders," "Freemasons," "Native and Visiting Artists," "Backward Glances," "Women of Newport," "Slave Ships, Pirates, and Privateersmen," "Newport's Naval Heroes," and "Centres of Interest."

These chapter headings give an idea of the scope of the book, which is a small quarto in size. There will be about seventy-five illustrations in it, including twenty full-page photogravures of the handsomest and most typical Newport residences, both interior and exterior; thirty double tones of the most intsresting views of Nswport, its amusements, &c.; twenty headpiece drawings and initials of residences, pergolas, &c., drawn by Edward Stratton Holloway, each of which is printed upon an India tint, and a full-page colored frontispiece by Henry Hutt.

The International Studio.

The current International Studio includes among its usual beautiful illustrations a portrait of President Roosevelt, ready for framing. It is from the etching by Sidney L. Smith. The number also contains a fully illustrated article on the building recently erected in St. Paul, Minn., for the new State Capitol, which was designed by Cass Gilbert; "The Print Division of the Library of Congress," by Miss Leila Mechlin; "Weaving in a Westchester Farm House," by Harriet Stanton Blatch; "Ancient Tables," by A. S. Levetus; "Besnard's Work in Paris," by Henri Frantz, and the Tempera Exhibition at the Carfax Gallery, described by Aymer Vallance.

PROF. MOORE'S NEW BOOK.

What Prof. George Herbert Moore did for Gothic architecture in his book published fifteen years ago he now does for the art of the Renaissance in "The Character of Renaissance Architecture," which the Macmillan Company publishes. He was the first to demonstrate that the great principle of Gothic architecture is balance of thrusts, and now, in his latest work, he shows that the architecture of the Renaissance is "an art without consistent principles," and that "there was no true adaptation of classic elements" in the design of the period.

The architects of the Renaissance were strangely inconsistent. While in practice constantly violating the principles of classic design, they were in theory ardently advocating these principles; and, finding strict canons of proportion laid down in the writings of Vitruvius, they attached, as theorists, great importance to such canons.

Prof. Moore has reduced the mere descriptions of buildings to a minimum, having provided many illustrations—twelve photogravure plates and 139 drawings and photographs—to make the discussions clear.

He writes in his introduction about the character of the fine arts of the Renaissance, the mixed influences actuating the artist of the time—the painter's habits of design, &c. This is followed by chapters on the dome of Florence, St. Peter's dome, Renaissance architecture in the erection of churches and palaces in Rome and Florence and the North of Italy, carving, and architecture of the Renaissance in France and England.

METCHNIKOFF'S NEW BOOK.

IN putting into English M. Elie Metchnikoff's new book, "Immunity in Infective Diseases," Francis G. Binnie of the University of Cambridge has attempted to give "a faithful rendering of the ideas and arguments of the original, even at the risk of an occasional crude expression, rather than to attempt to reproduce the brilliancy of the original by any wide verbal departure from the text."

As M. Metchnikoff points out in his dedicatory letter to MM. E. Duclaux and E. Roux, the book "sums up the labors of twenty-five years." It is based on reports and articles on "Immunity" which he published during the past ten years. The table of contents forms an analytical summary of the principal topics; there is also in this edition an index which serves not only as a key to the details discussed in the body of the book, but also as a reference to the numerous authors cited. The pages of the original work have been indicated in the margins. The illustrations comprise forty-five figures in the text. The Macmillan Company is issuing the volume.

Englishmen on an American War.

G. P. Putnam's Sons publish the "History of the Civil War in the United States," by Lieut. W. Birbeck Wood, M. A., and Major J. E. Edmonds, R. E., both of the British Army. It deals especially with military tactics, and has been written from an impartial English point of view. The authors write of the value of the civil war in the introduction:

It has for officers whose knowledge of foreign languages is, for the most part, limited, the great advantage that the original documents, of which an enormous mass has been preserved and published, are, without exception, in English. Its long duration and the great extent of the theatre of the operations, both by land and sea, make it a storehouse of almost every type of military action. The changes in weapons which have taken place since its conclusion have been so great as to preclude any student from supposing that he can anywhere find in it actions to be precisely copied, a temptation to be avoided, the object of military history being not to provide patterns to be copied mechanically, but to stimulate independent thought.

Among the sources drawn from are Ropes's "Story of the Civil War," Henderson's "Stonewall Jackson," the Scribner series of campaigns of the civil war, works on Gen. Lee, and others. Eleven battle plans, thirteen maps, and other illustrations have been provided. There are also a list of works to which reference has been made in the footnotes and a diary of the principal events in the two theatres of war.

Peter Rosegger Again.

"I. N. R. I." is the title of a new book by Peter Rosegger, the German peasant writer, discovered a few years ago by G. P. Putnam's Sons, who publish English versions of his novels by Frances E. Skinner. "The Forest Schoolmaster," "The God Seeker," "The Earth and the Fullness Thereof." For a number of years the writer has been popular among German readers, attracting attention by his handling of the Christ theme. The new book, the subtitle of which is "A Prisoner's Story of the Cross," is published by McClure, Phillips & Co. The story is told by a carpenter in homely and colloquial language. An interesting feature of the book will be the series of pictures in color from paintings made in the Holy Land by Corwin Knapp Linson.

A Book by Mallock.

W. H. Mallock's "The Reconstruction of Religious Belief" will be published by the Harpers Oct. 26. The author occupies himself with the question of the discovery of an "intellectual solution of the contradiction between science and religion." He finds at least an indication of what the answer may be in the fact that science as it probes deeper into vital processes comes closer and closer to the realm of mental philosophy.

Hichens's New Story.

Mr. Robert Hichens, the Harpers announce, will furnish the new serial story for Harpers' Bazar, to begin its course when Mrs. Freeman's "The Debtor" is finished—that is, with the January number. Mr. Hichens's story is named "The Call of the Blood," and the author of "The Garden of Allah" has selected Sicily for his scene. The illustrations, which will be numerous, will be furnished by Orson Lowell.

"The Ugly Duckling."

Moffat, Yard & Co. have in preparation a centenary edition of Hans Christian Andersen's story, "The Ugly Duckling," which is believed to typify his own life. Four of the many illustrations provided for the book by M. H. Squire will be in full color.

Tarkington's Book.

Booth Tarkington's new novel, "The Conquest of Canaan," will be published in book form Oct. 26. As those who have seen it in its serial form know already, it is an Indiana story, though the hero goes to New York and the heroine to Paris in the course of it. The Harpers are the publishers.

The Novel of Down East.

Squire Phin

By HOLMAN F. DAY.

Every person in Maine is more or less of a firecracker—Holman Day has touched them off. In no other part of the world is the real life of a countryside so intense, quaint, tragic, humorous. There are warm hearts and quick tongues in Maine. There is broad joking, fierceness and bitterness and tenderness. Squire Phin himself is the strong, genial, great man that now and then comes out of a New England village to dominate the nation. O. his great love and his part in extraordinary and humorous developments, Mr. Day has made an absorbing story. Illustrated. $1.50.

Claims and Counterclaims

By MRS. MAUD WILDER GOODWIN
Author of "Four Roads to Paradise," etc.

THIS is not the sort of novel to be advertised as one of the "six best sellers." It appeals to a discriminating taste rather than to a popular estimate of what the bookseller regards as the best commercial product. It will be enjoyed by readers who are affected by clever dialogue and a sane but interesting presentation of character. ($1.50.)

FROM READERS.

A Few Remarks from Abroad About Mr. Howells, Mrs. Wharton, and Mr. H. M. Alden.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

AFTER reading many reviews of the last books put out by Mr. Howells and Mrs. Wharton, after having for years read with eagerness the works of those authors and admiring greatly the finish of their productions as literature, and after being often disheartened and now thoroughly disappointed that such genius should not find more beautiful themes in which to express itself, I should like to put a question to THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW. Can any one explain why the Dean of American letters and one of the cleverest women writers in the world should find it worth while to continually describe the belittling qualities and frailties of human nature instead of using their talent to give the world some uplifting picture of mortal effort? Or, if a picture is not possible because no model can be found for it, could not Mr. Howells and Mrs. Wharton idealize for us who need to be led by thought higher than our own? Can they not take a word of Lowell's and turn it to account?

"If I cannot reallze my ideal, I may, at least, idealize my real."

Perhaps it is living in the land of Zola and Daudet that makes one long for fiction that shall give something beyond the unfortunate ordinary. The actual ordinary may well be preserved perhaps in fiction for future students of history, but cannot Mr. Howells and Mrs. Wharton afford to write also for the present, and does not the present long to be made to smile with joy as well as with irony? Is it well to nurture in us the debasing humar weakness of ridiculing our friends, and will not an enemy's shortcomings do us less harm if we do not devote hours to reading of them besides having suffered them? Surely these two authors are too well paid to deal in nothing but "damaged wares"—the motives that are contemptible.

And in spite of all, we read what they give us. To be sure, they are too dear to waste; like the bonne bouche we may not want, we eat it, hoping it will prove satisfying. So we take up each new production, hoping the great, the desired has come at last. Some of us would like to have of Mr. Howells last memories of noble and beneficent creations. Has he known no high-souled women, whose lives were not marred by weakness and selfishness, to draw his characters after? A considerable portion of the known earth seems to have been populated by, with, and through women; can Mr. Howells and Mrs. Wharton find no women worthy of their pens?

We Never Forget.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

A communication Sept. 30 under the heading "Do We Ever Forget?" touching a recent review of Dr. Saleeby's book, recalled an experience of my own. Some years ago I was sitting near a window on a cloudy day. I was in the abstracted mental mood when objectives are easily suggestive. Suddenly the sun broke through a cloud, bringing out upon the carpet a vivid square of sunshine. As suddenly I saw a mental picture of another room, where, more than fifty years before, and when not more than three or four years old, a similar checkered square of sunshine had so strongly attracted my curiosity in regard to the incomprehensible brilliancy of the carpet colors that I sought an explanation of the often-observed phenomenon. All the details of the room and the landscape through the window were as vividly presented as if I had seen them the day before. But, stranger than all, the pattern of the sunlit spot of carpet was reproduced. Inquiries of older members of the family corroborated the truthfulness of the subjective picture. I am certain that no effort of mine could have before brought out the faintest blur of the vividly recalled circumstances, for the family moved from the house shortly after. The circumstance of my infantile interest in sunlight enhancing color doubtless very soon passed into the wards of subconsciousness.

Medical works abound with instances of strange awakenings of the subconscious mind. Not the least interesting are those where a language learned in childhood, and from disuse totally forgotten by the active or objective mind, has been fluently recalled in delirium. Is it not possible that the subconscious mind is the storehouse of all impressions, and that memory is but the power to recall them? Is it not possible that the soul, the subconscious mind, is the real self, and that the objective mind is but the instrument by which it receives impressions and acts upon the material world

BOSTON NOTES.

A Handbook of United States Political History—Other New Books Already Published or Announced.

AT rare intervals one encounters a work of reference tempting one to imitate that friend of the Autocrat who read the first volume of the "New American Encyclopaedia" from "A" to "Ara," and such a book is Mr. Malcolm Townsend's "Handbook of United States Political History." The publication of works of this sort began early in the nineteenth century, but it is a long way from "The American's Guide," printed in Philadelphia in 1810, to this book of nearly thrice its size, and touching on topics not even named in 1810. Prepared under the stimulus of the merciless questioning of the author's boys, this work gives complete tables of information of all species. Genealogies, nicknames, autographs, lists of the writings of all the Presidents; accounts of their educational advantages, and descriptions of their inaugurations and burial places; a political history of the Confederate States; the province of each department of the general Government, are some of the contents of the volume. When first issued, with the old Lothrop imprint, as "U. S. Curious Facts," it was comparatively small, but its size is now doubled and its information comes down to the present year, justifying its new title.

Mrs. Augusta Hale Gifford's "Italy" has been in type for some time, but now appears formally. It is a volume of 800 pages, indexed less minutely than is strictly desirable, but fairly well equipped for reference, and it states the case between the blacks and the whites with uncommon fairness. It is strongest in its history of Rome, and the period between the fall of the empire and the accession of the House of Savoy to sovereignty is treated in decidedly summary fashion.

How to be naughty although virtuous is the problem solved by the children in Mrs. Richards's holiday book, "The Armstrongs." The story will be published by Messrs. Dana Estes & Co., and at the same time will appear Mr. Edward S. Ellis's "Plucky Jo," which, beginning in an American district school, with the achievement of damming a forest spring to make a swimming place, ends with adventures among the Chunchos, "the worst Indians in Peru and in all South America."

An odd survival of the literary convention that the poor are essentially blameless appears in the protests against Mr. George S. Wasson's "The Green Shay," with its portrayal of the wrecker and his ways, and of the dull indifference to Christianity in some seaboard settlements. On the other hand, the officials of the Life Saving Service have hastened to thank the author for the accuracy of his descriptions of their work, and of the lawless deeds of the wreckers. The first edition has been sold in the United States, a second in England, and the third is nearly ready.

A third edition of Mr. George Cary Eggleston's "A Daughter of the South" is already necessary within six weeks of its publication day, and the Victorian Society's intended celebration of Trafalgar Day is beyond all expectation augmenting the orders for Capt. Mahan's "Sea Power in Its Relations to the War of 1812." But who can tell what may happen to any book, serious or light? "Jorn Uhl," Gustave Frenssen's novel, which at first seemed likely to repeat its European success in this country, and then was neglected, is now the object of a steady stream of small orders from booksellers all over the Union wheresoever there are German settlers. The death of Mr. Jefferson causes the appearance of a holiday edition of Mr. Nathan Haskell Dole's "Joseph Jefferson at Home," a monograph, illustrated with sixteen photographs of Mr. Jefferson's Summer environment; it will be bound in ooze leather, with Jefferson's autograph reproduced on the cover, and will bear the Estes imprint.

Besides Capt. Mahan's book, Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. will also publish tomorrow Miss Lilian Whiting's "The Joy That No Man Taketh from You," a little book intended to exhibit the entire possibility of leading a Christian life, and containing the witness both in prose and poetry of a great number of confessors of many shades of Christianity. "The Select Poems of Robert Browning," arranged in chronological order by Mr. N. J. George, is set down for the same date. Mr. George's intention is both biographical and critical, and he recounts the circumstances under which each poem was written, besides comparing the author with Wordsworth and Tennyson.

Of this firm's two Italian holiday books, Mrs. Miller's "Two in Italy," a continuation of "Roma Beata," illustrated by six full-page pictures by Mr. John Elliot, will appear Monday after next. Miss Lilian Whiting's "The Florence of Landor" will wait until November.

So many writers of children's stories and of novels have turned their attention to the Five Nations and Walter Butler this season that Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. will have ample space in the Canadian field, in which they have three story books, two modern and one Colonial, besides "French Pathfinders in North America," by Mr. William Henry Johnson, to be published Oct. 30. This book summarizes many volumes of Parkman. For adult reading they announce "The Fight for Canada," by Major William Wood, President of the Literary and Historical Society of Quebec. This book is called "A Sketch from the History of the Great Imperial War," and is illustrated by portraits of Wolfe and Montcalm, and accompanied by the scale map of the siege of Quebec, and the action on the Plains of Abraham drawn by Wolfe's engineers, and presented in six colors, and also by a reproduction of Jeffrey's map of New France and New England in 1759.

Saturday of next week will bring Mr. Henry James's "English Hours," with its eighty pictures by Mr. Pennell, and four papers not before printed in book form, and "In Our Convent Days," by Miss Agnes Repplier. It is a striking exemplification of the proverb concerning half the world and the other half that Protestant readers of The Atlantic papers constituting this book have supposed that its scene was a French convent, although it is really situated in Pennsylvania. The pupils are more strictly cloistered, if the word may be allowed, than in some other convents, and, to-day the government is exactly what is was in Miss Repplier's time. Mr. Edward Stanwood's "James G. Blaine," Mr. Albert Phelps's "Louisiana," Mr. George Cabot Lodge's sonnet sequence, "The Great Adventure," "Letters from the Dead to the Dead," by "Oliver Lector," and "Saxe," an illustrated group of sixteen poems, and Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s further announcements for the last Saturday in October. There is also a new edition of Dr. Holmes's "The One Hoss Shay," with Mr. Howard Pyle's illustrations, now placed at the price of an ordinary novel.

"The Bible Beautiful," by Miss Estelle M. Hurll, published by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. this week, will be conspicuous among religious gift books, for it is much more than a collection of pictures on Scriptural subjects. The author has studied the subject of Bible printing and publication, and has used her wide knowledge of art to such good purpose that no century and no country is left unnoted in her book. An illuminated title page printed in gold and two colors; some of the great hymns of the Church; an outline of subjects in the "Biblia Pauperum" and selections from the "Byzantine Guide to Painting" are added to the text, and the work is indexed by "Artists," by "Places," and by "Bible Subjects," a precautionary measure of much value in these days when the Scriptures are not too sedulously searched.

MILTON.

IN THE DAYS OF MILTON. By Tudor Jenks, author of "In the Days of Chaucer" and "In the Days of Shakespeare." Illustrated. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co. $1.

THIS volume is the third in a series which succeeds in a rather unusual degree in accomplishing the impossible. It is a "popularization," in other words, which manages to retain a vital spark or two. Mr. Jenks has already "done" Chaucer and Shakespeare and their times in words of one syllable, (historiographically speaking.) Now he applies the same process to Milton. He doesn't assume that you know anything—he explains in general terms what cavaliers were, what Puritans were, what were the conditions and troubles of England under Elizabeth and James and Charles, and how Milton grew out of those conditions. He tells of Milton's parentage, his schooling at St. Paul's and Cambridge, his lyrical youth at Horton, his travels in France and Italy, his middle age of secretarial duties and political pamphleteering, and his epic old age in the shadow of blindness.

Mr. Jenks gets in a very considerable number of facts and rebukes Dr. Samuel Johnson for jeering at the burst of eager patriotism on the poet's part, called forth by the war between Parliament and Charles I.—the burst of patriotism which ended in his teaching a boys' school. It is in short Mr. Jenks's policy to explain away the human weaknesses of the author of "Lycidas" and "The Areopagitica" and "Paradise Lost," and make his appeal to readers still presumably young and impressionable with the nobler side of the hero. That process does not leave Milton as interesting figure as a man, but by and large the book is both instructive and readable.

LATIN AMERICA.

An American Business Man's Record of His Observations on a Business Trip.*

HERE are recorded the experiences and impressions of an American business man on a trip through Panama, Ecuador, Peru, Chile, Argentina, and Brazil. The trip was a business trip, and the writer is exercised over the strange negligence of American business men in securing the South American market for an inevitable future need, if not a present one. But the record is almost wholly of a traveler's experiences, observations, joys, and tribulations, and not at all of business conditions and requirements. It is thus an addition to the numerous books of South American travel; but its descriptions of a country where conditions have changed rapidly have some value because of their freshness and of the writer's candid expression of an alert business man's ideas. How much more valuable the book would have been if he had written more about his business experience.

Colon and Panama were his first stopping places, crying aloud for sanitary improvement; he saw the beginnings which the French made on the canal and an enormous amount of their abandoned machinery and implements perishing in rust and decay. Business in Panama is dull, but the merchants hope for revival when the American canal work begins, even though such a "shower of gold" as came from the French is not expected.

Only at one place on his whole journey did this traveler suffer positive discomfort—at a little road house on the stage coach line over the Andes in the gap between the two railways. The Argentine road runs through "the most wonderful railroad country in the world," mile after mile, without turn or curve, with only a bit of grading here and a little filling there. At Buenos Aires a feeling of "admiration and enchantment" took possession of him that has never left him; a city growing with the mushroom expansion of a Chicago, though it was founded as long ago as 1535. Concerning the city he is moved to remark:

> Best foot forward and appearances above all things is the motto of South America, it isn't a half bad motto when united to the push and progressiveness that I found everywhere in Buenos Aires.

Political considerations, however, are less pleasing:

> No matter what a man's standing may have been before election to office, once he is in it is taken for granted that he is there to make what he can out of it. * * * Public sentiment seems to be, the higher the office the bigger the chance for graft.

In Montevideo he landed in the midst of a revolution, and after dug warning

ENGLAND 1760-1801.

VOL. X., the first to appear in "The Political History of England," edited by Dr. William Hunt of Trinity College, Oxford, President of the British Royal Historical Society, and Reginald L. Poole, M. A., is published by Longmans, Green & Co. It treats of the period from the accession of George III., in 1760, to the close of Pitt's first administration in 1801, and is by Dr. Hunt.

The history is to be complete in twelve volumes, and the next two, Vols. II. and III., will be respectively from the pens of Prof. George B. Adams of Yale University, and Prof. T. F. Tout of the Victoria University, Manchester, England. Each volume is sold separately, being written in such a way as to make it independent of the rest. For each volume an appendix has been provided in which is given an account of the chief authorities to which the author referred in his text; besides some maps, &c.

Primarily, the work will deal with politics, with the history of England and, after the date of the union with Scotland, Great Britain, as a state or body politic. It is intended to set forth in readable form the results at present attained by historical research. Following the issue of the three books above noted, will be others by Thomas Hodgkin, Sidney J. Low, Prof. C. Oman, Prof. F. C. Montague, I. S. Leadam, and other authorities on the different subjects and periods.

RAILROADS AND THE STATE.

HENRY S. HAINES'S volume on "Restrictive Railway Legislation," which the Macmillan Company is bringing out, contains the substance of a course of twelve lectures delivered in the early part of this year at the Boston University School of Law. The author's purpose is to present the manner in which legislation and judicial decisions have affected the operations of railway corporations in their relations to the public.

The book follows the growth of railroad legislation corresponding with the development of the American National system in its several fields of activity; in railroad incorporation, finance, construction, operation, and traffic. There are chapters on ratemaking, the regulation of rates, the State Railroad Commissions, the State control of corporations engaged in public service, and there is a discussion of the bills now before Congress, including the Cooper-Quarles bill—"a bill further to define the duties and powers of the Inter-State Commerce Commission."

In his concluding chapter Mr. Haines asserts that competition is essential for the growth of railroad legislation. He writes:

> In following step by step the development of railroad transportation and of railroad legislation, as they have proceeded "pari passu" from their crude beginnings to their present complex relations, the conclusion must ultimately be reached that the solution of the railroad problem is to be sought in the interaction of the factors of competition and combination in the affairs of men; as in their blind struggles for supremacy, individuals, tribes, classes, and nations come under the domination alternately of the one or the other of these factors in their daily life, in their social relations, and in their national existence.

LUCIAN.

ABOUT the most modern of Greek writers was Lucian of Samosata—not the saint, but the satirist. He ought really to have written in English; as it is, he endures translation very easily. The sea-change from Greek to English does not affect him, 'tis his Attic salt that keeps him as sweet as when the first edition of his works came out, seventeen centuries or so ago. Emerson declared sententiously that one ought to read foreign books only in English translations. This was easy to say, but certainly it is good advice in the case of Lucian as translated by H. W. Fowler and F. G. Fowler. Their work might be original, so far as its ease and vivacity are concerned; the reader forgets that he is reading dialogues and essays written seventeen hundred years ago. There is little in Lucian's subjects to remind one of the centuries that have passed since they were discussed by him; and there is nothing in the new English version to suggest that Lucian wrote in anything but good modern English.

Lucian was a Syrian by birth; he learned to speak almost pure Attic Greek; taught rhetoric in Greece, Italy, and Gaul, and then lived in Antioch and in Athens, winding up his career in a well-paid legal post in Egypt. He was a jester—a good-natured forerunner of Dean Swift, who certainly got the suggestion of his "Gulliver's Travels" from Lucian's "True History." But Swift is not the only one to be influenced by the Greek author: within a week a newspaper of this city printed an editorial in dialogue suggested—possibly quite without the writer's knowledge—by Lucian's dialogues. For Lucian is as modern as Horace; his essay on the art of writing history might have come out in any recent review, and is entirely applicable to-day. The sneers at the persons who hurry into historical writing might have been written after reading a list of books on the Spanish war by the heroes who took part in it—vicariously and otherwise. His dialogues of the gods, of the dead, of the hetairae, are the models for dialogues of to-day, in style, wit, and "smartness." St. Paul quoted from Menander; a good many saints and sinners are pupils of Lucian, we think.

Ordinarily a translator is but a name; but this translation of Lucian is so excellent that one wants more than the names of those who have made it. "H. W. Fowler and F. G. Fowler," says the title page. But who are they? Are they Oxford men—or are they Oxford women? We should not be surprised if they were women. The translation has a femininity about it—is dainty as well as accurate and finished. The fact that certain parts of Lucian's writings are omitted "by way of expurgation" is evidence that the translators are women, for in his desire for "completeness" the ordinary male translator would leave out nothing, least of all what called for expurgation. In either case, however, this Fowler translation is a work of high art, for which its authors are to be thanked.

*THE WORKS OF LUCIAN OF SAMOSATA. Complete with Exceptions Specified in the Preface. Translated by H. W. Fowler and F. G. Fowler. In four volumes. Vol. I., Pp. xviii.-343; Vol. II., Pp. iv.-370; Vol. III., Pp. iv.-336; Vol. IV., Pp. iv.-341. Oxford: Clarendon Press. New York: Henry Frowde. $4.

"Constitutional Law of England."

"Constitutional Law of England," by Edward Wavell Ridges, (Little, Brown & Co.,) is written from the standpoint of the lawyer interested in the development of the English Constitution. The frequent reference to statutes and cases is a valuable feature. After showing what are the sources and characteristics of English Constitutional Law, Mr. Ridges sketches in detail the legislative, the executive, and the judiciary, the Church, the army and the navy, and concludes with a consideration of constitutional relations in the colonies and the Indian Empire. On the much-mooted subject of the federation of the British Empire and the creation of a federal Parliament, he says:

Federation, if it is to come at all, must proceed by gradual stages of development, without any such sudden and drastic changes as the creation of a federal Parliament would entail at the present moment.

Mr. Ridges's parenthetical observations upon the American constitutional system are not very happy. In the brief space of three pages devoted to this subject he makes these startling statements: "He [the President] is further empowered to fill up vacancies in the Senate as they occur," Page 17, and "The ratification [of the Constitution] by the last of the States, thirty-seven in number, who now compose the Union, was that of Rhode Island in 1790," Page 15. Even in matters of English history he is as careless in detail. For example, the Act of Union with Scotland was not in 1706, as is stated on Page 77, but in 1707. Magna Charta did not specify that the "tenants in chief" were to be summoned "by general writs addressed to the Sheriff," as we read on Page 50.

NATURE'S SAMURAI.

AT THE EMPEROR'S WISH. A Tale of the New Japan. By Oscar King Davis. Illustrated in colors. 12mo. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.25.

MR. DAVIS names this a tale of the new Japan. Really in the romantic essentials it is very much like those tales of old Japan—surpassingly brave in men and lovely in women—with which we are familiar in the works of Mr. John Luther Long and Mrs. Frazier and the rest. To be sure, the bravery is displayed in the late war in Manchuria, and in the face not of mediaeval two-sworded samurai, but of intrenched Russians with modern rifles. The story tells of old Kudo Jukichi, a samurai with only his traditions left—officially there are no longer samurai in Japan—proud but poor, and Kutami Chobei, a commoner, who is rich and otherwise admirable. Kutami makes choes, which he presents to the Emperor's soldiers to march in, and both Kudo and Kutami have sons, the apples of their several eyes—the samurai destined for the army and the commoner for commerce.

They go to the same school—one founded and endowed by the commoner—and are not friends, and when the war comes both fight in Manchuria in the same company, so that the gentleman by immemorial descent may learn that a commoner's son may be a better gentleman and a better soldier. The interest of the story depends really upon a girl—the daughter of old Kudo, a girl who is everything that a woman in a romance of "new Japan" ought to be—beautiful, simple, brave, devoted. For she loves the commoner's son from her school days upward. The little story deals pleasantly with noble sentiments and poetic justice, and is adorned about the heads of the pages with the usual vanities of "holiday books." It is, however, one of those stories which play upon the prettinesses of Japan—even the manly virtues are so sublimated as to have that aspect—and, as a Japanese gentleman remarked the other day, the Japanese are no "butterfly people," but men even as we. Perhaps they resent this kind of thing.

English Abbeys.

The introduction to Ralph Adams Cram's volume on "The Ruined Abbeys of Great Britain," published by James Pott & Co., sums up his judgment on the character of the monasteries in Great Britain at the time of their abolition and of the motives that led to their ruination. Toward the end he writes:

We may say, then, that the destruction of the English monasteries resulted in unnumbered murders; the reduction to beggary of 100,000 men, women, and children; the total destruction of about $200,000,000 worth of property; the alienation to those who had no claim to it whatever of estates the rentable value of which was about $11,000,000 per year; the temporary extinction of education, mercy, and public charity; the abolition of great sections of territory and for several millions of people of the services and ministrations of religion; the eternal loss of works of art of immeasurable value, and, as the event proved, "the creation of a large class of poor to whose poverty was attached the stigma of crime."

The ruins described and illustrated are Glastonbury, Whitby, Lindisfarne, Beaulieu, Netley, Tintern, Gisburgh, Bolton, Jedburgh, Keleo, Rievaulx, Byland, Melrose, Dryburgh, Kirkstall, Malmsbury, York, and Fountains.

In the concluding chapter Mr. Cram, who is the author of "Church Building" and other books on architecture, estimates the position of the abbeys in English social and economic life and the effect of their suppression upon the moral and religious condition of the people. The book is fully illustrated and has a full index of names and places.

Gen. Gordon's Book.

REMINISCENCES OF THE CIVIL WAR. By Gen. John B. Gordon of the Confederate Army. With portraits. 8vo. Pp. 474. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

A cheaper edition of Gen. Gordon's Reminiscences will be welcome to a great many people, no doubt. In a book of this kind the chief value, of course, lies in the record of what the author himself saw of the great struggle of the sixties. Gen. Gordon's summing up of the political questions involved has, however, the merit of brevity and temperance, and his attitude toward his brother heroes on both sides is characteristic of his generation, and well calculated to encourage peace and good will. This is no place, of course, for repeated or revised criticism of the book. But it is worth while to remind the potential reader of the quality of the work, which covers a distinguished military career and stretches from the organization of the Confederate Government at Montgomery to the surrender at Appomattox.

HARPER'S BOOK NEWS.

The Gambler

From the "Cleveland Leader."

GLORY BE, she has done it again!

Who?

Katherine Cecil Thurston, author of that fascinating story, The Masquerader.

In Heaven's name, what has she done?

She has written THE novel of the year again.

What is it called?

The Gambler.

And why do you grow thus hysterical over it?

Because of its pull on the sympathies. When a woman in a book comes out of its pages and grips you like one in real life; when you get all a-tremble for fear she may do this thing and groan and moan because she does do that; when, in a word, she seems so real that your interest is personal and you worry over her, then there is every reason to exult.—Cleveland Leader.

The Debtor

Mary E. Wilkins Freeman, whose New England tales have touched the hearts of thousands of readers in a way that few books have, in this novel draws a hero of no common sort. His chequered career is appealingly portrayed. It is a searching study of character and also a well-told tale—told in the true Mary E. Wilkins style. There is here a love story of the most alluring type, while the unusual fortunes of "The Debtor" are sure to be followed with eager interest.

A History of Our Own Times

In these new volumes (IV. and V.) Justin McCarthy carries his admirable history from Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee to the accession of Edward VII. This is one of the very few histories that deserve a place also as literature. The author, widely known as a historian and scholar, is especially happy in his portraiture of the various statesmen, reformers, authors and scientists whose lives figure prominently in the times of which he writes.

For the Mikado

Kirk Munroe has written a brand new and stirring story for boys, recounting the adventures of two lads during the late Russo-Japanese War. Daring exploits in submarine boat warfare are a novel feature of this engrossing tale.

QUERIES.

TO secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

A correspondent who does not sign his name says that "Pelayo, or the Cavern, of Covadonga" was written by Anna Cora Mowatt Ritchie, "when very young, and suppressed (?)." We find that it was indeed written by her, and that the other books asked for by "R. A. W." were also by her: "Pelayo, a Poem in Five Cantos," 1836; "Reviewers Reviewed," 1837, in answer to criticisms on the poem; "The Fortune Hunter," by "Helen Berkley," 1842, and "Evelyn; or, a Heart Unmasked," over her own name, 1845.

LYMAN CARY, Flanders, N. J.—Would you kindly tell me where I can find the phrase, "The troops swore horribly [or terribly] in Flanders"?

In Laurence Sterne's "Tristram Shandy" Volume III., Chapter XI., you will find the correct quotation: "Our armies swore terribly in Flanders," cried my Uncle Toby, "but nothing to this."

Mrs. M. B., Brooklyn.—I have had a present of a wise man china tea set. I would like to know the meaning of its decoration.

The heads on the different pieces of the set represent a thousand wise Buddhist priests. We do not know that there is any story connected with the pattern.

IGNORAMUS, Niles, Mich.—1. What was the so-called "Ladies' Peace"? 2. Who was the "King of Bruges"?

1. This was the peace made at Cambrai on Aug. 5, 1529, between Francis I. of France and the Emperor Charles V. It was called so because the mother of the one and the aunt of the Emperor negotiated it. 2. We find no "King of Bruges"; but Charles VII. of France was called King of Bourges because he was first recognized as ruler of France by that city.

J. L. H., New York.—Please name a history of the world that also gives some of the idle gossip of it. I wish such a work in four parts at most to be used as a reference book in which to find the historical environments and if possible some biographic facts of more or less historical character met with in works of fiction and dramatic art.

You cannot get any such work—the chronique more or less scandalous would crowd out the history were it admitted. We think that Haydn's Dictionary of Dates, however, will come as near as any book to meeting your wants.

Lady Fullerton's books. I do not remember which, but I think it is in either "Lady Bird" or "Ellen Middleton."

M., Boston.—The maiden name of the wife of Thomas William Parsons was Anna Allen.

R. M. M., New Rochelle, N. Y.—Your correspondent, F. E. B., will find the verses, "Why, Phoebe, are you come so soon," &c., in "Songs for the Little Ones at Home," published by the American Tract Society.

R. L. C. W., Nashville, Tenn.—You are in error as to the authorship of the poem referred to by "Miranda," Cedar Rapids, Iowa, (Queries, Sept. 23.) I do not recognize the lines quoted, but they assuredly do not occur in Dr. Holland's famous poem beginning, "God give us men," which is included in his collected works as "Wanted" and is printed in some of the anthologies under the title, "Give Us Men."

B. W., New York.—"The Child's Guide," asked for by F. E. B., was published by Merriam, Chapin & Co., Springfield, Mass., for many years, commencing about 1833. This firm, I believe, still exists, possibly under a slightly different name, and doubtless may be able to supply the book. If not, I have a copy, published in 1852, which I will be pleased to loan F. E. B.

M. M., Springfield, Mass.—S. B. O., Halliwell, Me., may like to know that a book called "Notable Women Authors of the Day" is written by Helen C. Black. It was published in 1893 by David Bryce of Glasgow, Scotland, and by Lippincott of Philadelphia. I do not find the address of the author, although she is evidently English. If only initials were given, the author might be thus taken for William Black.

SOPHIA B. GILMAN, Halliwell, Me.—Recently a poem was asked for with the line, "For thou hast shared the life of Christ, one day," and was answered as by Ellen Hamlin Butler of Bangor, Me. The poem is "The Life Divine," and was printed in The Congregationalist, Boston, August, 1903.

S. T. P., Amesbury, Mass.—The Boston Public Library has a complete file of The London Times, including the index.

F. B. R., Rochester, N. Y.—Can you give me the names of any books that are stories of newspaper life, such as "Guthrie of The Times," for example? Also the names of the publishers.

Jesse Lynch Williams, "The Stolen Story," Scribner; David Graham Phillips, "The Great God Success," Stokes; Richard Harding Davis, "Gallegher, and Other Stories," Scribner; Elizabeth G. Jordan, "Tales of the City Room," Stone; Robert Barr, "A Woman Intervenes," William Drysdale's "The Young Reporter," and Kirke Munroe's "Under Orders," are older books, and intended for boys.

L. BIMBER, New York.—Kindly inform me where and for what price I can obtain the complete political and theological works and an impartial biography of Thomas Paine, author of "The Age of Reason."

Moncure D. Conway has edited his complete works, and written a life of him, which are published in six volumes at $15. This is the best edition. The Library of Liberal Classics contains the complete works, five volumes, $5, and life, $1.

J. D. C., New York.—Kindly give me the value, if any, of a first-class copy of The Ulster County Gazette of Jan. 4, 1800, containing the news of the death and interment of Washington. Also the value of a leather copy of Byron, including his suppressed poems. The FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

Washington Gladden on "Tainted Money."

A HUMOROUS serial story by Anne Warner, creator of "Susan Clegg," is announced for forthcoming numbers of The Century. It is a narrative of travel in France, told principally in the form of letters. The epistles are written to her mother by an American girl traveling with an uncle. The old gentleman's monologues are interspersed with the letters. The book includes descriptions of cathedrals and other "sights," (upon which the uncle comments in his typical American manner,) relations of accidents and love affairs, and satires on foreign travel.

Messrs. D. Appleton & Co. seem to be making a specialty this Autumn of novels by American writers. "The Reckoning," by Robert W. Chambers; "The Giants," by Mrs. Fremont Older; "Baby Bullet," by Lloyd Osbourne; "Duke of Devil-May-Care," by Harris Dickson, and "The Outcast Warrior," by Kirk Munroe, are a few of the noteworthy works of this description from their presses selected for review in an article on American fiction to-morrow in the Sunday edition of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

McClure, Phillips & Co. announce for early issue "The New Idolatry," by Washington Gladden. The worship of money is the theme of the series of discourses which make up the book. Mr. Gladden takes up in his first chapter, "Tainted Money." The publishers are bringing out new printings of Phillips's "Red Saunders," Brady's "Indian Fights and Fighters," and the late Mrs. Waltz's "The Ancient Landmark."

Apropos of the announcement made this week by the well-known artist, Charles Dana Gibson, that he is to drop his cartoon work for the study of oil painting in Europe, it is interesting to note on the Scribner list of publications for today "Our Neighbors," a volume containing a number of hitherto unpublished drawings by Mr. Gibson. This is believed to represent the last examples of his work in the field of pen and ink.

The Funk & Wagnalls Company is actively preparing for publication shortly the new edition of Dr. W. D. P. Bliss's "Encyclopedia of Social Reform," for which the compiler has gone to Europe to get articles and other material. This house has also in press the new Bible Dictionary, which will appear in one large volume early next year. It is being edited by Prof. Jacobus of Hartford Theological Seminary, (who has just returned from abroad, whither he went to arrange for European collaborators,) Prof. E. E. Norse, and Prof. A. C. Zenos.

"Stories of Useful Inventions" will be contributed to early issues of The St. Nicholas Magazine by S. E. Forman. Among the histories will be those of the match, stove, clock, boat, and other inventions.

The John C. Winston Company of Philadelphia is issuing "The American Boy and the Social Evil," by Dr. Robert N. Wilson of the University of Pennsylvania. Moffat, Yard & Co. are to publish immediately "The Story Bible," by Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster. The well-known writer retells for children the old tales of the Bible, and covers the entire Book from Genesis to Exodus. A dozen full-page drawings in colors embellish the volume.

The T. J. Carey Company is sending from the press an édition de luxe of "The Apparitions and Shrines of the Blessed Virgin." The work is in four volumes, and has an introduction by Mgr. Bernard O'Reilly.

From the Scribners comes this week Capt. Robert F. Scott's story, in two illustrated volumes, of the most important antarctic exploration expedition ever undertaken, "The Voyage of the Discovery." Not only were many important geographical and scientific discoveries made during the three years of the expedition, but a point much further south was reached than heretofore. The work is from the pen of the commander himself.

Doubleday, Page & Co. will issue next month "Flashlights in the Jungle," translated by Frederic Whyte from the German of C. G. Schillings. The volume is called an authorized translation. It will have an introduction by Sir H. H. Johnston, and a letter from President Roosevelt to the author, and will be brought out uniform with "The Opening of Tibet." The author is a well-known traveler, hunter, and scientist. The book is the outcome of his fourth trip in 1903 through equatorial East Africa. Harper & Brothers are also issuing a translation of a portion of the text with the title "With Flashlight and Rifle."

The Hobart Company will publish at once "A Soldier's Trial: An Episode of the Canteen Crusade," by Gen. Charles King. Into the plot of the story the author has woven an argument in favor of the restoration of the "army canteen." The story deals with army life on the frontier.

Abbe Klein's Book in English.

The impressions recorded by Abbé Félix Klein in his book on "The Land of the Strenuous Life," the original French of which has already been reviewed in these columns, are appearing with the imprint of A. C. McClurg & Co. of Chicago. The author voices his opinions and observations on American life and comments on each city he visited, including New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Washington. He tells his purpose in the introduction:

What I proposed to myself in crossing the Atlantic was to seek in your country the profitable example of certain virtues which you possess in a very high degree, and which we in some measure lack. As a sort of representative for a commercial establishment on the moral realm, I went to select among the various products of your land those which ours do not supply in sufficient quantity, and upon my return to distribute them as widely as possible.

While the picture the Abbé draws of Americans as a whole is flattering, he good-naturedly also shows their defects. He writes in one place:

You are a people at once energetic and tolerant; you promote without hindrance your own freedom, and you respect as sacred the freedom of all your brothers. In this at least—and it is a great deal—you deserve to be taken as the model of the world, and I count it a favor of God to have the honor to set this example before France just at the moment when it is most needed.

THE books that become classics rarely attract great popular attention when first published. They begin their lives quietly and modestly, and steadily win their way into the favor of the intelligent public by merit and not by sensational "pushing," until they arrive at the assured position they afterward hold. Such was the history of The Wide, Wide World, Uncle Tom's Cabin, The Leavenworth Case, Ben-Hur, David Harum and many other notable books of the last half century.

Miss Reed's books are steadily growing in public estimation and in sale. Each year there is a demand for all of them, new and old, far in excess of the sale during the previous year.

CHOATE WARNS AGAINST THE PACE THAT KILLS

Finds America Amazingly Swift on His Return from England.

PRAISES THE PRESIDENT

And Pays Tribute to John Hay—Lotos Club Dinner in Honor of the ex-Ambassador.

Joseph H. Choate, recently returned from the Court of St. James's, warned New York in a speech at the Lotos Club banquet in his honor last night that it is going the pace that kills. He compared American methods with British, saying that Americans worked too hard and too fast.

About 300 members of the Lotos Club attended the dinner. The clubrooms in Fifth Avenue were decorated with Autumn oak leaves and chrysanthemums. The menu card was in green, the cover inscription being in gilt and in the shape of a harp, having symbolical reference to a speech Mr. Choate delivered in Dublin on the occasion of King Edward's visit to that city, when he said, in effect, that New York was dependent upon Ireland for its governmental officers.

The guests of honor at the banquet included J. Pierpont Morgan, Admiral Charles Sigsbee, W. B. Hornblower, Judge Edward Patterson, Admiral Charles Coghlan, Major Gen. Brooke, James M. Beck, H. D. Estabrooke, Dr. Robert S. MacArthur, the Rev. Minot J. Savage, W. H. McElroy, and F. R. Lawrence.

President Lawrence introduced the guest of the evening. Mr. Choate began:

"Nothing but this cordial and genial greeting could ever have brought me to my feet after the overwhelming story that your President has told about me. I fail to recognize myself in the picture he has drawn. In so far as he has been drawing upon my services, he has entirely overdrawn his account. [Laughter.] And he has sacrificed his credit with these bankers who are sitting about me.

"He tells me he has been President of the club for seventeen years. I wonder whether the record of the club and his own record for that protracted period would bear the searching investigation such as is now going on. I wonder what his emoluments and perquisites have been during that time. I see he has a son and a son-in-law here. [Prolonged laughter and cheering.] And I would like to hear from him in what measure they have shared in his prosperity.

"I want to say that delightful as every year and every day was to me when I was abroad, and as loyal and as devoted as were my friends who gathered about me there, splendid as was the hospitality which I enjoyed from the beginning, I am constrained to say that the most delightful day of all was the day when I found myself on the steamer Corona, bound for the United States, to be once more back at home for good.

"Now you won't expect me on this occasion to discuss the people among whom I have been for the last seven years. I have been appealed to to 'write them up.' I think I could have made a very good living by so doing. But I hardly thought that suitable. It may perhaps be more to your liking to enumerate the changes I have noted as having taken place here during my absence.

"In the first place the rush of life seems to have grown much more intense than it was when I went away. The strain of nerve, mind, brain, and body seems to have been growing stronger and stronger every year. You were going at a tremendous pace when I went away; now you have set upon a pace that kills. How mind and body and nerve and brain can stand it remains to be seen.

"It seems to me that we, as a people, could do well to imitate a little of the repose and relaxation that prevails in certain other countries. Let me tell you what the difference is between the life of a lawyer in New York and one in London.

"When I was hard at work practicing law here the Judges and the lawyers were busy from the first week in October to the last Friday in June, with no interval but a few days around Christmas. On the other side they have learned to mix business with pleasure a great deal more than here.

"The courts in London open on Oct. 24, and the lawyers and Judges work for a period of eight weeks. Then comes a Christmas holiday of two weeks. Then they go back for eight weeks more and work until Easter, when another rest comes. Then eight weeks more of labor until another period of rest. Eight weeks more brings them to the Summer vacation of ten weeks, and that completes the round of legal service.

"There never was a time when the young men of America had such magnificent opportunities as they have to-day. The old men need them for their help and support. And when fathers and mothers complain how hard it is to find places for their sons I wonder whether it is the fault of the fathers and the mothers in having taken too much care of their sons, or whether the sons have relied too much on the fathers and mothers. Or shall I say that these young men are born blind to the opportunities that surround them.

"There is not a business, there is not a profession, there is not a public service, that is not on the lookout at every moment for capable and willing young men to do the work that is waiting to be done.

"When I returned from abroad I had an opportunity to notice the wonderful growth and expansion of the City of New York, of which we are all proud. When I first saw this city it was four miles long, ending at Forty-second Street, and having a population of 500,000. Now I am told it embraces a territory of 300 square miles and holds nearly 4,000,000 people.

"I often hear New York and London compared. London increases its permanent population 100,000 a year. But it will be a very close march between New York and London if you take the next twenty years into account. And what else have I seen? I have found that we are now citizens of a country grander by far than it was before, a country that has been gaining in the admiration, wholesome respect, and the affection of every other nation in the world.

"I want to refer to one man no longer with us, who had a very great share in the promotion of the good name, fame, and power of his country abroad. It was the greatest privilege of my life to have served him and to have been instrumental

COWBOYS CAPTURE ENGINE.

Ride After Runaway Locomotive and Bring It Back.

Special to The New York Times.

CASPER, Wyoming, Oct. 21.—A runaway engine captured by cowboys was the unusual incident which occurred here yesterday. The engineer had left the locomotive in the yards, but had neglected to shut off the throttle completely. He had gone only a short distance when he discovered the locomotive was in motion. It gained such momentum that the driver could not overtake it, and it went careening from the yards and down the main line of the Northwestern toward Douglas.

When near Stroud, a small station ten miles east of here, the runaway locomotive was seen by two cowboys on horseback riding on the road beside the track. The line at this point is built over a flat prairie without any grade. The cowboys gave chase, and one climbed on the tender of the locomotive, which was running about ten miles an hour.

Not being familiar with the mechanism, the young man yanked at the first brake he could see, which proved to be the throttle, but instead of shutting it off, as was his intention, he pulled the throttle out to its full length, and like a flash the engine shot down the track. He reversed the lever and finally brought the engine to a stop.

With the aid of his companion, who had continued to gallop after the engine, he succeeded in starting it back over the path it had just traversed. The water in the boiler was low, however, and as the cowboys did not know how to operate the pump, the engine stopped two miles from town and had to be towed in.

In the Douglas yards a passenger train was about to start out, and if the wild engine had not been stopped a wreck would have occurred.

SLEPT ON SUBWAY TRACK.

A Convivial Car Greaser Takes a Nap in the Path of an Express.

Henry A. Brady, a greaser, employed in the Subway at the Grand Central station, arrived there last night from his home, at 1952 Boston Road. On the way he met convivial friends.

Afterward he gave the other car cleaners and greasers much trouble. He got in his own way and everybody else's. Finally he took to waylaying trains. He was taken by William Knouth, chief of car cleaners, to the little office at the end of the station and told to stay there.

About fifteen minutes later while the station was crowded with the transferring theatre crowd, a north-bound express came in. As it nosed into the station a shriek went up which presently swelled to a roar. The motorman looked out and saw an excited crowd signaling to him. Another glance showed him a man lying across the track.

The motorman threw on the brakes and the train came to a stop about eighteen inches from the man's head. It was Brady—sound asleep. He was taken to the East Fifty-first Street Police Station and locked up.

OLD PROMOTER IN BELLEVUE.

William R. Holbrook Asks Policeman Way to the Waldorf.

William R. Holbrook, 83 years old, of 105 East Twenty-sixth Street, for many years a mining promoter and merchant of this city, was placed in the psychopathic ward at Bellevue Hospital last night. Mr. Holbrook had an office at 92 Liberty Street.

Through unfortunate investments Mr. Holbrook lost a fortune. His wife, however, had inherited a large sum, and the old man was provided for. Two weeks ago Mr. Holbrook became ill and was admitted to the Presbyterian Hospital. George P. Stockwell of 39 Remsen Street, Brooklyn, a cousin of Mr. Holbrook, says he arranged with the hospital authorities that Mr. Holbrook should not be discharged from the institution unless he was notified.

On Friday last the authorities of the Presbyterian Hospital allowed Mr. Holbrook to be sent to Bellevue. Yesterday morning he was transferred to Blackwells Island and placed in the Metropolitan Hospital, from which he was discharged later in the day.

Last night Patrolman Hanley of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station found Mr. Holbrook wearing a black suit, high hat, and carrying a cane, at the foot of East Seventieth Street. The man asked the nearest way to the Waldorf. He acted peculiarly and was again sent to the Presbyterian Hospital and later to Bellevue.

About twelve years ago Mrs. Holbrook and her daughter, Mrs. Wadsworth Smith, left New York City and went to Winter Park, Fla. They tried to get Mr. Holbrook to accompany them, but he remained in this city alone.

STATE GETS A $10,000 ESTATE.

Woman's Will Leaving Money to a Stranger Declared Invalid.

Augustus Burkhard of Long Island City will not get the $10,000 left to him by Miss Martha Duncan, who died on Feb. 27, 1904, because the Attorney General has been able to convince Surrogate Daniel Noble of Queens that Miss Duncan was not competent to make a will three days prior to her death. The Surrogate in a decision rendered yesterday refused to admit the will to probate, and New York State is richer by some $10,000, a large part of which is in gold.

John T. D. Donnelly of Long Island City left the money to his aunt, Miss Martha Duncan, who lived on the Shore Road near Casino Beach, in Steinway. He told her that the money should be left at her death to his friend, Augustus Burkhard, or, at least, that is what Miss Duncan said in her will. She did not know Burkhard. He knew nothing of his friend's request, and was the most surprised man in the State, when, a few days subsequent to her death, he learned that he had been named as chief beneficiary. The money was found stored in chests in Miss Duncan's home.

FRIENDS OF SAM PARKS HECKLE JEROME A BIT

A Brave Man, Says the District Attorney, Let Him Rest.

CHEERED BY THEM AT LAST

Close Quarters and a Warm Debate in a Tiny Meeting Room, but Everybody Satisfied.

Putting in an unheralded appearance at the opening of the Madison Avenue Jerome Club's headquarters at 1,491 Madison Avenue last evening, District Attorney Jerome found himself confronted with a gathering of the followers of the late Sam Parks, the labor leader who died in Sing Sing.

For a while the few friends who accompanied Mr. Jerome were calculating if they would be strong enough to beat off a possible attack. The only one who remained unconcerned and apparently unconscious of danger was Mr. Jerome himself. By patiently listening to the questions fired at him and by answering them as patiently he staved off any trouble that might have been made and turned the meeting to his own credit.

It was held in a small store with a single entrance. This was in front. The platform was in the rear of the hall. The place would be crowded with 100 persons in it. There were more than that number on hand when Mr. Jerome arrived, and by the time he succeeded in making his way to the platform, accompanied only by a few friends and a Police Roundsman, fully 250 persons had jammed themselves into the room, while others filled the doorway and the window sills, and still others were climbing up on the shoulders of those in front.

The crowd set up a mighty shout when Mr. Jerome, unintroduced, stepped up on the platform and began:

"Well, here I am."

Then he told them that he had not come to make a set speech, but that if they wanted to ask any questions he would be glad to answer.

"Where did he get it?" yelled the crowd, immediately.

"No," said Mr. Jerome, "that's my question. I am asking that—not answering it. And I am asking another question, too. One that I will go on repeating till I hear a reply. Murphy says I sent several emissaries to him at Good Ground. One has turned up. That is Ahearn. But who are the others? Who are the others? He says he has proofs. Let him furnish them. I dare him to name either one of the others."

"Tell us who they were?" urged somebody.

"No—[Mr. Jerome paused a moment.] No, that's what I dare him to do. I have not yet seen any afternoon papers, but I understand the boss at Good Ground says he has quit talking. He says he has proved his case against me.

"That's funny—I didn't know there was any case against me. It might be more fitting that I had a case against him. And, by the bye—I have called him a grafter; that's laying a fine basis for sending emissaries to him, isn't it? No, I have appealed to you, the people, and I never did, nor ever will, appeal to anybody else."

Mr. Jerome went over some of the ground covered at his previous meetings, ending by saying that he was not running against any organization or against other candidates, but against Charles F. Murphy.

"You might ask why I don't say that I am running against the other boss also," he added. "Well, what's the use of running against a dead one, and that's what Odell is, I guess."

A young man broke in with a question about Canfield. Mr. Jerome urged him to come up on the platform, so that he could get a look at him. The man responded, yelling that he was a Sam Parks man and an iron worker, but he wanted to know about Canfield first. Several voices were heard in the crowd calling out that they wanted to hear about Sam Parks also.

Mr. Jerome went over the whole Canfield case, showing how the only thing he could do, if he wanted any result at all, was to take the gambler's plea of guilty.

"How about Sam Parks?" was heard again as soon as he finished.

"I went over to Groll's Hall last Saturday," Mr. Jerome replied. "And I stood up before the whole Board of Walking Delegates of the building trades and let them question me."

"And you made good," cried a man in the background.

"But we want to hear about Sam Parks," insisted the same voices, coming from a group of workingmen near the platform.

"He was a brave man in his way," began Mr. Jerome, "but—"

"He helped us," shouted a man in the group. "He raised our wages from $1.75 to $4.50 a day. He acted squarely with us."

"He acted squarely according to his lights," rejoined Mr. Jerome. "He did some good—and he kept many of you out of work not for your own good. He is dead, and we will not drag him out of his grave."

Another member of the same group took up the questions referring to the shooting of a union man three years ago by a strike breaker and the acquittal of the latter by the Coroner's jury. He went on to tell a rambling story about a call he and several others with a brother of Judge Steckler made on the District Attorney with a view of getting the supposed murderer prosecuted. And he ended by saying that if Mr. Jerome could answer that question he, the questioner, might see his way to vote for him.

"You said one of the Stecklers was your lawyer," said Mr. Jerome. "The Stecklers are all square boys. I leave it to them. I don't remember the case at all—there are 15,000 cases a year in my office—but you ask Steckler if I did not do all I could in the case. I'll abide by his answer."

Then some cheered and a few hissed. Some yelled that they wanted to listen to Mr. Jerome and not to fool questions. But it was late then, and Mr. Jerome said he would have to go. His departure was the signal for a rousing ovation, entirely free from discordant notes.

THREE HURT IN A RUNAWAY.

A Bicycle Policeman Makes a Daring Attempt to Stop a Team.

Three men were injured and the lives of several other persons imperiled by the half-mile dash of a team of runaway horses in Amsterdam Avenue yesterday afternoon. The men injured were Joseph Quinn of 110 East 115th Street, a driver for Landon & Co.; Robert Johnson of 2,789 Eighth Avenue, the driver of the coupé, and Walter Murphy of 558 West 161st Street, who was out for a drive with his aunt, Mrs. George Oakes.

While driving south on Amsterdam Avenue a portion of the harness broke at 155th Street, and Johnson's team started on a gallop. Bicycle Policeman Connealy took up the chase and tried to stop the horses. Several times he caught the bridle of the animal nearest him, but he was finally thrown from his wheel, narrowly escaping being run over. At 145th Street the team crashed into the wagon driven by Quinn. Murphy, Johnson, and Quinn were thrown to the street and were picked up cut and bruised in a dazed condition. Mrs. Oakes was tossed in a corner of the coupé, but was more frightened than hurt.

POPE PIUS X.'S TACT.

Averts Bad Feeling by Having a Statue Placed in a Church.

ROME, Oct. 21.—The tact of Pope Pius X. has again been the means of averting bad feelings. The Peruvian clericals here recently had the sculptor Rodriguez Villar design a statue of Pope Pius IX., which represented him at the dramatic moment when he uttered the famous words "Non possumus" at the time he refused consent to the union of Rome with Italy.

It was intended to erect this statue in a square in Sinigaglia, the birthplace of Pius IX., and it was expected that this would result in disorders and wound national feelings. Villar before proceeding with the erection of the statue went to Pope Pius X. for advice. His Holiness greeted him dryly, saying: "Saints should be in churches. As Pius IX. may be canonized, put your statue in the Cathedral."

AUTO HITS THEATRE CROWD.

Three Women Knocked Down—One Dragged 100 Feet.

Three women were hit by a motor car in Elizabeth, N. J., yesterday afternoon and one of them was severely injured. The accident occurred just as the matinée audience was leaving Jacobs's Theatre. The women were crossing the street, when the motor car came dashing down the avenue at a high rate of speed. The women had no time to get out of the way, and one of them, Mrs. A. B. Weedon of 315 Elizabeth Avenue, fell under the wheels and was dragged 100 feet before the car was stopped. When picked up she was found to be badly bruised about the face and body.

Mrs. Weedon's companions were her daughter, Miss Louise Weedon, and her cousin, Mrs. William Armstrong. Miss Weedon and Mrs. Armstrong were hit by the machine and thrown several feet.

The occupants of the automobile were Peter Cron, the owner; Cornelius Phillips, and a little girl. Phillips was pitched out of the car by the shock of the collision, and was cut and bruised.

The matinée crowd was much excited over the accident, and several men ran after the auto as it sped on, dragging Mrs. Weedon along with it. Cron stopped as soon as he could, and a policeman at once arrested him. He was taken before Police Court Judge Mahon, who held him in $500 bail.

HITS AT ROCKEFELLER.

Dolliver Refers to the Oily Views of Chicago University.

Special to The New York Times.

SEDAN, Kan., Oct. 21.—Senator J. P. Dolliver of Iowa, in a public speech here last night, intimated that the influence of John D. Rockefeller was so potent in the teachings of the professors of the University of Chicago that the campus smelled like a Kansas oil town. He did not mention the name of Rockefeller, but left the impression so strong that all knew very well who was meant.

Senator Dolliver referred to the oily views of the university and made a plea for the placing of American universities upon a higher plane than one which permits the influence of money to shape the teachings of the professors along the lines of sociology and political economy.

Special to The New York Times.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Oct. 21.—Five hundred Women's Christian Temperance Union delegates, who spent to-day here en route to the union's National convention at Los Angeles, had stricken from the dining card menu the wine sauce marked thereon, and at Creston, Iowa, while on their way to Colorado Springs they had a sleeper detached from the first section of ten coaches and another substituted because some one had smoked a cigar in the coach.

The troubles of the delegates were not over after their arrival here. Two colored delegates from Michigan could not obtain accommodations at local hotels, the color line being drawn by all. A local member took care of them.

LAKE STORM DEATHS NOW TOTAL TWENTY-ONE

Forty Vessels Lost or Damaged in the Fierce Storm.

STEAMER'S CREW RESCUED

The Siberia Founders in Lake Erie—Barge Tasmania Sinks with All Hands.

CHICAGO, Oct. 21.—Latest returns from the storm which swept the Great Lakes for thirty-six hours, subsiding this morning, increase the known death list to twenty-one and the number of vessels either lost or damaged to forty-two. Several small craft are missing, and it is feared that the death list will be increased.

The steamer Siberia of Cleveland foundered on the Canadian shore of Lake Erie this afternoon. Capt. Benham and the entire crew were rescued and taken to Buffalo to-night on board the steamer J. H. Wade.

The steamer Bulgaria reached Cleveland this afternoon bringing news of the loss of the barge Tasmania, off Pelee Island, in Lake Erie, during Friday's storm. The Tasmania, which the Bulgaria had been towing, broke loose and sank with her entire crew of eight men. Those lost were Capt. William Radford, Courtright, Ontario; Mate George Whitsill, Engineer Austin Mahew, and Seamen Michael Boyle, August Uhrick, John Trapp, J. R. Stough, and Harry Lapask.

The names of those lost when the schooner Minnedosa foundered in Lake Huron yesterday are Capt. John Phillips, Mrs. Phillips, Cook James Allen, George Smith, W. McIntyre, Kingston, and two others from Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, names unknown.

The steamer Western States of the Detroit and Buffalo Line, due at Buffalo yesterday morning, remained under the shelter of Long Point all night, arriving in port early this afternoon. Most of the passengers were sick during the trip. Four of the vessel's forward staterooms were badly damaged, the upper portion of one wheel box was laid bare, and about ten feet of the starboard rail was split.

The life savers at Ludington, Mich., last night rescued the crew of the Vega and Mrs. George Jergenson, the Captain's wife. The Vega is breaking to pieces on the beach.

At Manistee, about thirty miles north of Ludington, the small schooner Lydia is stranded on the beach. Her crew of three was rescued by the life savers.

At Frankfort the mail boat Reliance was wrecked. Mail Carrier Hays and his wife and son were rescued by the Frankfort life saving crew.

The schooner Alta was wrecked on Grand Island, near Munising. The crew of seven men and one woman were rescued in an exhausted condition.

BROOKLYN TROLLEY SMASH.

Lights Out in One Car, Another Crashes Into It—Motorman Hurt.

There was a rear-end collision last night between an express car and a trolley car on the Flushing Avenue Division of the Brooklyn Heights line. The motorman of the express car was hurt and is in a critical condition. Several passengers were cut by flying glass.

The accident occurred in the Fowlerville section of Flushing on a steep grade. As the express car reached the foot of the hill the trolley pole left the wire and the car was in darkness. The danger signals being thus extinguished and the motorman of the passenger car not seeing any lights ahead, ran down the hill at full speed and crashed into the express. The front platform of the second car was demolished by the impact, and Wagner, the motorman, was driven through the closed door into the interior of the car. His skull was fractured and his arm broken. None of the passengers was seriously injured.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 21.—In the United States District Court to-day H. Glenn Cunningham, an employe in the Charleroi Post Office, pleaded guilty to the embezzlement of $1,068.

Fred L. Kahle, his attorney, told Justice Buffington that Cunningham had three brothers in Japan who were missionaries, and if it became known there he had been sentenced to jail the Japanese people would hoot them out, telling them to go home and reform their brother.

The plea made a great impression on Judge Buffington, and Cunningham was sentenced to pay a light fine and the costs.

TRAIN KILLS AGED FIREMAN.

Capt. Burke, Warned by Flagman, Ran in Front of Freight.

"Look out, Captain," shouted a flagman at the Farmer's Bridge crossing of the New York Central, in the Bronx, to Capt. Francis J. Burke, foreman of Truck Company No. 69, yesterday afternoon.

"I guess I can make it," retorted the fireman, as he started to run in front of a freight train. He was struck by the locomotive, flung twenty feet into a ditch, and picked up dead. Nearly every bone in his body had been broken. Burke was 65 years old. In the civil war he was a Captain in the Twelfth New York.

$10,000 TENDERLOIN ROBBERY

While the Police Were Watching Women, Thieves Were Busy.

While Capt. Dooley's policemen were busy arresting women without escorts on Friday night thieves broke into the rooms of the firm of the Ollendorff Silk and Fur Company at 19 East Twenty-first Street. According to the Captain the amount stolen was about $5,000. According to Mr. Ollendorff the thieves' booty, so far as he can now reckon, was worth at least $10,000.

In entering the premises, which are close to Broadway, the thieves opened a hall door with a skeleton key. After that they broke open two doors, one of them of iron, protected by two intricate locks. The thieves took their time. Apparently they carried the plunder in their arms to an automobile and a wagon which was waiting outside the building.

The policeman on post discovered nothing wrong.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 21.—Russell Hall, one of the dormitories in the "Gold Coast" district in Harvard, was the scene of a damaging fire shortly after noon to-day. The flames started in a room on the grund floor occupied by V. Kidder, a football player, and William E. Russell, son of the late Gov. Russell.

Although the blaze was extinguished quickly by the Fire Department great volumes of smoke entered the halls and stairways and played havoc with the luxurious rooms of the students.

AUTOS CHASE WAR BALLOON.

French Experiment Shows Aerial Peril Can Be Lessened.

PARIS, Oct. 21.—The Lebaudy military dirigible balloon to-day made its third successful flight and manoeuvred against the wind.

Several army officers accompanied the balloons, dropping blank cartridges upon forts from an altitude of 4,500 feet, thus demonstrating the practicability of launching projectiles from dirigible balloons in time of war.

During the flight automobiles pursued the balloon and fired shots in its direction, leading to the conclusion that automobiles carrying light guns could seriously endanger aerial manoeuvres.

ROOSEVELT TO NEGROES: DUTIES BEFORE RIGHTS

He Talks at Colored School in Jacksonville to "My Friends."

POLICE DUTY IN HEMISPHERE

Checks to the Panama Canal Trivial—Cheering Crowds Greet Him in Two Cities.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Oct. 21.—President Roosevelt to-day for the first time addressed a negro gathering in the South. The meeting was at the Baptist School here and was arranged on the President's insistence after the local committee had refused to grant the request of the leading negroes.

Mr. Roosevelt addressed the colored people as "My friends," and told them to do their duty and their "rights will take care of themselves."

Declarations that the United States will certainly build the Panama Canal, and that it will police the western hemisphere, were made in his other speech.

The Presidential party arrived at 10:30 this morning on a special Southern train, and thousands cheered Mr. Roosevelt when he appeared. Gov. Broward, Mayor Nolan, Senators Taliaferro and Mallory, and others greeted him.

The President's Speech.

After a drive in parade through the principal streets in the city, the President was taken to the Seminole Club, in the principal square, where a great throng greeted him with cheers. He spoke as follows:

"Here in Florida, the first of the Gulf States which I have visited upon this trip, I wish to say a special word about the Panama Canal. I believe that the canal will be of great benefit to all our people, but most of all to the States of the South Atlantic, the Gulf, and the Pacific Slope.

"When completed the canal will stand as a monument to this Nation; for it will be the greatest engineering feat ever yet accomplished in the world. It will be a good thing for the world as a whole, and for the people of the Isthmus and of the northern portions of South America in particular. Because of our especial interest in it, and because of the position we occupy on this hemisphere, it is a matter of special pride to us that our Nation, the American Nation, should have undertaken the performance of this world duty.

"A body of the most eminent engineers in the world, both Americans and foreigners, has been summoned to advise as to the exact type of canal which should be built. At no distant date I hope to be able to announce what their advice is, and also the action taken upon their advice.

"Meanwhile the work is already well under way, and has advanced sufficiently far to enable me to announce with certainty that it can surely be accomplished, and probably at rather less expense than was anticipated. But upon the last point, as well as upon the question of time, no positive statement can be made until the report of the commission of engineers as to the exact type of canal has been received.

"The work is as difficult as it is important, and it is of course inevitable that from time to time difficulties will occur and checks be encountered. Whenever such is the case the men of little faith at home will lose that little faith, and the critics who confound hysteria with emphasis will act after their kind.

Adventurers and Stragglers.

"But our people as a whole possess not only faith but resolution, and are of too virile fibre to be swept one way or the other by mere sensationalism. No check that may come will be of more than trivial and passing consequence, will inflict any permanent damage, or cause any serious delay. The work can be done, is being done, and will be done. What has already been accomplished is a guarantee as to the future.

"When any such work is undertaken there are always many mere adventurers who flock to where it is going on, and many men who think they are adventurers, but who are in reality either weak or timid, follow in their footsteps.

"Some of the first class will now and then cause trouble in one way or another. But every care will be taken to detect any misdeed on their part and to punish them as soon as the misdeed is detected.

"As for the second class, they will cause trouble chiefly by losing heart, returning home, or writing home, and raising a cry that they are not happy and that the conditions of life are not easy, or that the work is not being done as they think it ought to be done. Now these men stand just as the stragglers and laggards stand who are ever to be found in the rear of even a victorious army.

"The veterans of the civil war who are here present will tell you that the very rear of an army, even when it is victorious, is apt to look and behave as if the victory were defeat. And just the same thing is true in any great enterprise in civil life; there are always weaklings who get trampled down or lose heart, and there are always people who listen to their complaints. They amount to nothing one way or the other, so far as achieving results is concerned, and their complaints and outcries need never detain us.

"I call your attention specifically to the matter of health on the Isthmus. The climate was supposed to be deadly, and yellow fever, in especial, was supposed to be epidemic. Yet since we have assumed control there has been far less yellow fever than in our own country. The administration is steadily becoming better and more effective, from the hygienic as well as from every other standpoint.

"The work of building the canal is a great American work, in which the whole American people are interested. It has nothing to do with parties or partisanship, and is being carried on with absolute disregard to all merely political considerations; with regard only to efficiency, honesty, and economy.

Policing the Caribbean.

"The digging of the canal will, of course, greatly increase our interest in the Caribbean Sea. It will be our duty to police the canal, both in the interest of other nations and in our own interest. To do this it is, of course, indispensable to have an efficient navy, (and I am happy to say that we are well on our way toward having one,) and also to possess as we already possess, certain strategic points to control the approach to the canal.

"In addition it is urgently necessary that the insular and continental countries within or bordering upon the Caribbean Sea should be able to secure fair dealing and orderly liberty within their own borders. I need not say that the United States, not only has no purpose of aggression upon any republic continental or insular, to the south of us, but has the friendliest feeling toward them, and desires nothing save their progress and prosperity.

"We do not wish another foot of territory, and I think our conduct toward Cuba is a guarantee that this is our genuine attitude toward all our sister republics. If ever we should have to interfere in the affairs of any of our neighbors it would only be when we found it impossible longer to refrain from doing so without serious damage following, and even in such case it would only be with the sincere and effective purpose to make our interference beneficial to the peoples concerned.

"Of course, occupying the position we do, occasions may now and then arise when we cannot refrain from such interference, save under penalty of seeing some other strong nation undertake the duty which we neglect, and such neglect would be unfortunate from more than one standpoint.

"Wherever possible we should gladly give any aid we can to a weaker sister republic, which is endeavoring to achieve stability and prosperity. It is an ungenerous thing for us to refuse such aid, and it is foolish not to give it in a way that will make it really effective, and therefore of direct benefit to the people concerned—and of indirect benefit to us, simply because it is a benefit to them. In the last resort, and only in the last resort, it may occasionally be necessary to interfere by exercising what is virtually an international police power, if only to avoid seeing some European power forced to exercise it.

"In short, while we must interfere always cautiously, and never wantonly, yet, on rare occasions, where the need is great, it may be necessary to interfere, unless we are willing to confess ourselves too feeble for the task we have undertaken, and to avow that we are willing to surrender it into stronger hands; and such confession and avowal I know my countrymen too well to believe that they will ever make."

After the President concluded he was driven to the Jacksonville Board of Trade Auditorium for luncheon. His entrance was the signal for the most enthusiastic outburst he had received. The interior of the large auditorium was decorated with flowers, the National colors, oranges, and alligators.

Address to the Negroes.

The President was driven to the Third Baptist Academy, where he spoke briefly. Preceding his speech the negro students sang several songs written for the occasion. The last one, entitled "You Are All Right, Teddy," caused the President to smile broadly. Mr. Roosevelt said:

"My Friends—Let me say what a pleasure it has been in driving along the streets to have the Governor and the Mayor point out to me house after house owned by colored citizens who, by their own industry, energy, and thrift, had accumulated a small fortune honestly and were spending it wisely.

"Every good American must be interested in seeing every other good American citizen rise; help himself upward so as to be better able to do his duty by himself and those dependent upon him and by the State at large.

"It seems to me that it is true of all of us that our duties are even more important than our rights. If we do our duties faithfully in spite of the difficulties that come, then sooner or later the rights will take care of themselves. What I say to this body of my colored fellow-citizens is just exactly what I would say to any body of my white fellow-citizens.

"What we need in this country is typified by what I have shown to-day as having been done by people of your race. We need education, morality, industry; we need intelligence, clean living, and the power to work hard and effectually.

"No man interested as every President must be in the welfare of all his fellow-Americans could be otherwise than deeply pleased, not only at the evidences of thrift and prosperity among what must be evidently many hundreds of your number here in this city, as shown by the homes that I have seen, but interested also in seeing an educational institute like this carried on as this institute evidently is carried on. The costliest crop for any community is the crop of ignorance. It is perfectly true that education in mind alone won't make a good citizen, but it is equally true that you cannot get the best citizen without education.

"We need to have our people of every race educated as the principal said in his words of introduction, in heart, mind, and hands; educated so that heads and hands can do their several tasks and have behind head and hand, also the heart, the conscience, the sense of clean and just living, which makes the foundation of all good citizens. That is just as true for the white man as for the colored man.

"It is true of every man. I was very glad to listen to the singing to-day. I like it all, including the last song. I wish I could have had a chance to listen to some of your educational exercises. I want to say a special word of acknowledgment to the school teachers, men and women alike, who are doing the work of education; and in saying that word I also want to point out that it is absolutely essential that we should have people do well in the professions, but that there is only a limited amount of room in the professions and there is almost an unlimited amount of room for men in agriculture and in the mechanical trades.

"Do your very best to develop good teachers, to develop good preachers; preachers who shall preach to the colored man as it should be preached to the white man, that by your fruits you shall know them, and that the truly religious man is the man who is decent and clean in his private life, who is orderly and law-abiding; the man who hunts down the criminal and does all he can to stop crime and wrongdoing; the man who treats his neighbor well; who is a good man in his own family, and therefore a good man in the State.

"That is what we have a right to expect from the Christian leadership which we see in the churches. All honor to the teacher, all honor to the preacher; but remember it is perfectly impossible that the bulk of any people shall be teachers or preachers.

"The bulk have got to be men engaged in the trades as mechanics, as wage-workers, as farmers. Every man who is a good farmer, a thrifty, progressive, saving mechanic, who owns his own house, which is free from debt; who is bringing up his children well and keeping his wife as she should be kept, is not only a first-class citizen but is doing a mighty good work in helping to uplift his race."

The President and his party were then driven around the city, after which they were taken to the station. At 5:45 the President left for St. Augustine.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., Oct. 21.—President Roosevelt to-night is the guest of the oldest city in the United States, and St. Augustine has put on gala attire to welcome him. From the railroad station to the Ponce de Leon Hotel, where he will remain until to-morrow night, the streets were made almost as bright as day with colored electric lights and red fire.

The President's train arrived at 6 o'clock. He was met by a reception committee and driven to the hotel. At the city gate he received from the school children a floral key to the city. The streets were crowded, and the President was constantly cheered. One party of young women showered his carriage with flowers.

He was driven to Fort Marion at 7 o'clock and delivered an address.

The President was driven to the Valencia Hotel, where he was the guest of the Board of Trade at supper.

IVINS ON TOUR TELLS LEADERS HE CAN WIN

Urges Republican Organization to Fight for Victory.

CHEERED AT FOUR MEETINGS

"If You Do Your Duty I Cannot Lose," His Declaration—Calls Hearst an Aid to Him.

Nearly all of the Republican election district captains of Manhattan and the Bronx were addressed last night by William M. Ivins, the Republican candidate for Mayor. Four meetings were held in different parts of the city for the sole purpose of giving Mr. Ivins an opportunity of meeting the workers of the organization.

The meetings were held at Mr. Ivins's suggestion, and were an innovation in city campaigning, the tour last night being the first of the kind ever made by a Mayoralty candidate merely for the purpose of talking to the men upon whom rests the responsibility for the Republican vote polled in their districts.

Mr. Ivins was accompanied by William Halpin, Chairman of the Republican County Committee; Senator Elsberg, his campaign manager; ex-Senator Slater, head of his Speakers' Bureau; John W. Hutchinson, and Monte Cutler. The party made the tour in automobiles.

The first meeting was at Teutonia Hall on Third Avenue, between Fifteenth and Sixteenth Streets. All election district Captains of that part of the city lying below Fourteenth Street were at that meeting.

"I came here," said Mr. Ivins when the cheers had died away, "to let you see the kind of a man you are going to vote and work for. This is a great fight, and it is a hard fight for me. My time, my flesh, my blood, and my best purpose are in this contest. Can't you help me? Won't you do your utmost for me?"

Cries of "Sure!" "Sure!" came from all over the hall.

"We have a better chance to-day than we have had in years to redeem the city from that organized appetite known as Tammany Hall," continued Mr. Ivins. "Who is going to be elected Mayor? Is it my competitor, McGowan—I mean Murphy?

"Mr. McClellan is asking the city to enter into a contract with him under unfair conditions. He won't say whether he intends to abide by the terms of the contract and continue to hold his office for four years, if elected. I intend to ask Mr. McClellan every night from now until election day whether he will serve out his term as Mayor if elected. And if he refuses to answer that question then you will know that it is his intention to throw down the banner which you will put into his hands whenever he sees a chance to get something better for himself.

"I tell you if you will follow where I lead in this campaign we cannot be beaten. [Cheers.] Tammany Hall's citadel is, after all, only a pasteboard citadel. We can break into it. It is only a question of purpose. If we lose this fight it will not be for lack of intelligence, but from lack of courage. Let us give up all thought of being with the winner. Let us do what is right, win or lose, and then we are sure to win."

At the Murray Hill Lyceum Mr. Ivins addressed the election district Captains of all the Assembly Districts from Fourteenth Street to Fifty-ninth Street.

"You have chosen me for your leader," he said. "I am going to make good. Will you make good also?" [Shouts of "We will! We will"]

"This will be the most seriously and desperately conducted fight for good government we have ever had in this city," Mr. Ivins continued. "We must fear no foe, contemplate no fatigue. The man who goes into battle fearing he may get hurt makes a poor soldier. Let us make up our minds that it is give and take in this campaign, mostly give. [Cheers.]

"Tammany Hall began its career in crime and now stands for the creed of honest graft. You might as well talk about polite pocket picking or considerate murder as honest graft. Remember that the next four years will afford greater opportunities for 'honest graft' than any previous four years in our history. Remember that, and let us set to work to redeem this town."

From Murray Hill Lyceum Mr. Ivins went to Marion Hall, on 132d Street and Lexington Avenue. There was a Hearst meeting in progress on the corner, and as the Ivins party drove up there were some cheers for Hearst. Then some of the Hearst followers came across the street and cheered the Republican candidate. The noise in the hall at his entrance led Mr. Ivins to say:

"The next time any man talks to me about there being no enthusiasm in this campaign I will look him in the eye, and while I will not tell you precisely what I will say to him, it will mean that he is mistaken. Let me tell you, if you do your duty as I will do mine I cannot fail to be elected. I have never seen a more hearty determination to win than I have seen evinced by those whom it has been my pleasure to address to-night.

"We must have thorough organization if we are to win. To talk about lasting results without organization is to talk about making bricks without straw. Let me assure you that the split that has been made in Tammany Hall is the boulevard through which I will ride into the Mayor's office. [Cheers.]

"The function of Mr. Hearst in this campaign is to elect me. [Laughter and cheers.] I rely absolutely upon your loyalty. Do your best; get out the full Republican vote for the ticket and we cannot lose."

The last meeting addressed by Mr. Ivins was at the North Side Republican Club, in the Thirty-fourth District. All the election district Captains of the Bronx were gathered there, and James L. Wells, the Republican candidate for President of the Board of Aldermen, and Hal Bell, Republican candidate for President of the Borough of the Bronx, were present.

"I am glad to meet the men who are going to be with me on the rush line in this campaign," said Mr. Ivins. "My impression of them is that they are the right kind."

"After meeting the Republican election district captains to-night and learning what their temper is, I believe my defeat is impossible, but I want to assure you that if I am defeated and Mayor McClellan is elected and later makes any attempt to leave his office, I will be on his heels all the time he is running away from it." (Applause.)

Looking around at the lithographs of himself which decorated the walls of the club, Mr. Ivens said:

"I came here to-night because I wanted you to feel that you were not voting for a lithograph, but for a man. I have been told that my lieutenants will not be loyal. I do not believe it. I am absolutely confident that every Republican leader will be true to the principles for which we stand. [Applause.]

"If I am elected Mayor as a result of this campaign we will not only save the city from the honest grafters of Tammany Hall, but we will save the city from the financier as well. Instead of palaces and bulldogs, we will have more schoolhouses and clean streets."

The meeting in the Bronx was the last addressed by Mr. Ivins. When it was over William H. Ten Eyck, leader of the Thirty-fourth District, presented the captains to the candidate. Both Mr. Ivins and Chairman Halpin expressed themselves as highly gratified over the large attendance of election district captains at each of the meetings and at the enthusiasm manifested.

Mr. Ivins will go out of the city to-day to get a rest. He begins his campaign in Brooklyn to-morrow night.

Ivins's Franchise Threat.

Attorney General Mayer's attention was called yesterday to the statement made by William M. Ivins, the Republican candidate for Mayor, that the Attorney General would aid him in bringing about the reassumption by the city of lapsed and forfeited franchises and in enforcing the law against the Consolidated Gas Company for alleged violations of its charters. Mr. Mayer said:

"I have generally followed the course of not anticipating official action. My views on the subject of forfeited franchises were expressed in an opinion written when I granted the application of the City of Rochester to begin suit against the Rochester Railway Company to have certain of its franchises forfeited because of expiration or non-use. I think that may be taken as an expression of my views on the general subject, although each case that arises necessarily will stand upon its merits."

647,089 CAN VOTE.

But of These 30,000 or 40,000 May Not Go to the Polls.

Revised figures of the city registration show that 647,089 voters have qualified for Nov. 7. Estimates of the number who will neglect to exercise the franchise vary from 30,000 to 40,000.

The smallest number of voters is in the First District. The Thirty-fifth, where Haffen and Healy rule, has this year a voting total of 33,484, equaling in voting strength the counties of Hamilton, Schuyler, Putnam, Seneca, and Schoharie combined. It leads all the Assembly Districts in Greater New York.

The Twenty-first, where Gruber and Donohue are the leaders, is second in political importance this year. A close third is the Twenty-third, led by McKee and McAvoy. The Thirty-fourth, which has three leaders, Cowan, McGuire, and Ten Eyck, is fourth. Fifth stands the Thirty-first. Strasbourger and Hopper divide the large majority of its 20,470 voters between themselves.

The First Queens, bossed by Cassidy and Ripperger, and the Seventh Kings—the Bay Ridge-Coney Island District—have more than 20,000 voters each, putting them in the class with the first five New York County districts.

The McManus, the new leader of the Fifteenth, has brought his district up to fourteenth place, the registration being larger than ever before. Charles F. Murphy's district is tenth, with a registration of 9,324. William Halpin's district is eleventh with a registration of 9,073.

In McClellan's home district, the Fifth, 7,975 are registered. In the Twenty-fifth, the home district of Ivins, the registration is 6,623. In Hearst's home district, the Twentieth, the registration is 8,097.

The registration by assembly districts in the order of their voting strength follows:

HEARD IN THE CAMPAIGN.

When Hearst Is Mayor—Callers on Jerome—A Natural Songster.

"I have not the least longing for New York City," wrote a Kansas City editor to Mr. Jerome yesterday. "I think it a dull place, and Kansas City is good enough for me. But I'd give my best mare if I could get East just now and put in a vote for you."

An inoffensive passenger was riding up Broadway on the rear platform last night. At Thirty-sixth Street a McClellan banner had been stretched across the street.

"Well, he's goin' to get his on election day!" remarked the conductor, nodding his head in the direction of the Mayor's portrait.

"How's that?" asked the Inoffensive Passenger.

"'Cause Hearst's goin' to get 'lected," answered the conductor. "We'll all vote for him. You see, he's fer municipal ownership. When he's elected he'll buy the street railroads and we'll all get the same pay and only have to work eight hours a day, one day a week off, and two weeks' vacation every year with pay."

"That so," said the I. P., interested. "Who told you that?"

"Oh," said the conductor, "that's what the Hearst speakers tell us up at the car barns, and they know. Hearst sent 'em to tell us."

"But where's the city going to get the money to buy the lines?" asked the passenger. "You know, the city is within $40,000,000 of its debt limit, and street railroads come high."

The conductor looked contemptuous.

"Never you mind," said he. "Hearst'll attend to that. Why, he'll put up the money himself if necessary."

Everybody in the Jerome headquarters swung around as if touched by an electric shock when a great voice was heard in the anteroom yesterday afternoon:

"Where's that fellow Jerome?"

In the doorway stood a man measuring 6 feet 4 at least. He was bearded and bronzed by the sun and beaten by wind and weather. His wide-brimmed hat alone sufficed to indicate where he hailed from. But to make matters certain he said himself in the same resounding voice:

"I'm a Westerner, and I've come to take a look at Jerome."

By that time every one in the room was smiling in recovered security. Somebody replied:

"Mr. Jerome is not here now, and I don't know if he'll be here until late."

"Sorry," rejoined the stranger. "Well, all I wanted was to tell him he's a prince. I was to break for home to-night, but I guess I'll stay another day now. Say, you fellows—you think you're going to make a District Attorney of him. Pah! We out West want him for President, and that settles it, I guess. S'long. Tell him I'll be back."

"My name is 'Jim' Crook," said the colored visitor to Republican County headquarters. "I spoke for the National Committee in the campaigns of 1896 and 1900. I'm known all over the South as 'The Black Crook.' I can talk the roof off a henhouse and make the chickens come perch right on my arms."

"You must be quite an orator," said the man in charge.

"I am the greatest colored orator in this country, Booker Washington and Charles Anderson excepted. But I win more votes by singing than I do by oratory."

"Indeed," he was asked, "how do you do that?"

"Why I ask the audience to put questions to me and then I answer them with a song."

"Can you always find a song that will be an appropriate answer?" inquired the Chairman of the Speakers' Committee.

"Yep; never fail. Give me a try, and I'll show you."

"Well, I don't know that I could put you on," said the Chairman, "we haven't got much money to run this campaign on."

"If you ain't got no money you needn't come 'round,'" sang the orator from the South in a rich basso voice.

But even after that they didn't hire him.

The Hearst managers are claiming the right to designate their ticket as the "young man's ticket." They base their claim on the ages of the candidates and those in charge of the campaign. William R. Hearst, the candidate for Mayor, is [illegible]; ex-Senator Ford, the candidate for Controller, is 44; J. G. Phelps Stokes, the candidate for President of the Board of Aldermen, is 34; Judge Samuel Seabury, candidate for the Supreme Court, is 30; Thomas F. Gilleran, candidate for Borough President of Manhattan, is 37; Clarence J. Shearn, the candidate for District Attorney, is 35; Joseph Palmieri, candidate for Judge of General Sessions, is 41; Joseph W. Cody, the candidate for Sheriff, is 43; Max F. Ihmsen, manager for Mr. Hearst, is 37, and Melvin W. Palliser, his assistant, is only 32.

OSBORNE QUOTES JEROME IN HIS OWN BEHALF

In 1901 Tammany Rejected Its Present Candidate.

JEROME DENOUNCED ACTION

But Osborne Didn't Complain, He Says —Insists That His Opponent Is Merely Disgruntled.

James W. Osborne, Tammany's candidate for District Attorney, made a speaking tour last evening in an automobile, and again attacked District Attorney Jerome. His first speech was delivered in the Miller Building, at 110 West Sixty-fifth Street, in his own Assembly district, to an audience of about 400 men. Deputy Controller Philips presided.

Mr. Jerome was the target of all the speeches. John W. Keller paid his respects to the District Attorney in this fashion:

"Four years ago Mr. Jerome said that before he got through he would have some Tammany officials doing the lockstep at Sing Sing. Well, he hasn't sent a single one. I was in Delmonico's last night. I saw there Richard Canfield, dining sumptuously. You remember what Mr. Canfield was charged with, and you know what happened. You remember also Sam Parks, remember what was his fate. That's the parallel I wish to draw, that's what this man whom some of you think so honest did, that is the net result of his doing—Canfield dining in Delmonico's, Parks under the sod."

Mr. Osborne said, in part:

"I stand before you, fellow-citizens of New York, with my hat in my hand. If Mr. Jerome were here, I suppose he would say, 'Where did you get it?'

"Mr. Jerome, with his exquisite gift for epigram, amuses his audiences by referring to me as 'Poor Jim.' He tells the people to come and look at me and size me up.

"Well, here I am. Here is 'Poor Jim.' I suppose, my friends, that I am as poor in this world's goods as most of you here; but in my friends I feel that I am more than rich. If Mr. Jerome can find amusement in calling me 'Poor Jim,' let him have it.

"In all Mr. Jerome's speeches in this campaign he has been very careful to disclaim any reflection on any individual candidate of the Democratic Party. If this means anything, it means that those candidates, one and all, are worthy the vote of every Democratic voter of this city.

"'But,' says Mr. Jerome, 'I represent the people; I am the candidate of the people; I am the Moses that is to lead the people out of the wilderness; I am not fighting Democracy; I am not fighting Osborne; nor am I fighting Shearn.' Well, then, who is it or what is it that he is fighting? He give us a frank answer. He says, 'I am fighting Charles F. Murphy.'

"When you have waded through all his words, all his appeals to the Deity, all his protestations of honesty, all his assertions that he has 'made good,' all his sarcasm against 'poor Johnny Ahearn' and 'poor Jimmy Osborn,' and when you get down finally to the real nub and heart of his case, you find that the only issue, so far as he is concerned, is that he is fighting Charles F. Murphy." Mr. Osborne said the reason for this antagonism was the fact that Mr. Jerome did not receive the Tammany nomination for District Attorney. He considered, he said, that Mr. Jerome's reply to Ahearn admitted that he was willing to see Charles F. Murphy at any hour of the day or night in order to get the Tammany nomination.

"If you will pardon this reference to myself, may I read you a criticism which a learned citizen of New York made upon the Democratic convention of 1901, because they did not nominate me for District Attorney in that year?

They took their candidate in preference to a man who fairly earned the dignity of the nomination, they took him in preference to James Osborne, a Tammany Hall man for years, and an honored practitioner at the bar of this State. They put aside Mr. Osborne, who had every claim to the nomination by reason of service and by reason of sterling honesty and merit. They called the issue.

"You have never heard any criticism of that convention come from the lips of James W. Osborne. I do not, after my name has been under consideration by the leaders of my party and another man has been nominated, denounce the convention for its failure to nominate me. I have ventured to read these words to you because they were the words of a man who ought to be an authority on the office of District Attorney—a man who has talked more about the District Attorney than any man alive; they are the words of District Attorney Jerome.

"In other words, in 1901 Mr. Jerome denounced the Democratic Convention because they did not nominate me, and in 1905 he denounces it because they did nominate me. It is hard to please Mr. Jerome when it comes to a Democratic convention."

Among the other speakers were T. C. Crain and Senator Grady. Mr. Grady referred to the Republican candidate for Mayor as a "mongrel candidate," because he acknowledges voting for others than Republican candidates.

RIIS WITH McCLELLAN.

He Says the Mayor Has Been Honest, Efficient, and Dignified.

Mayor McClellan spent a busy afternoon yesterday mapping out his speaking engagements for the week. It is the intention of the Mayor to resume this week his polyglot campaign, which found so much favor two years ago. Another novel feature of the week will be the tour into Queens County on Wednesday night, with speeches in Flushing and at Richmond Hill.

Jacob A. Riis, whom President Roosevelt termed his "ideal citizen," lives at Richmond Hill and is expected to preside at the meeting there on Wednesday night. Mr. Riis visited the McClellan headquarters, in the Bartholdi Hotel, yesterday, and spent some time with the Mayor. Before leaving he said:

"I support Mayor McClellan because he has been a good Mayor, an honest Mayor, an efficient Mayor, and a dignified Mayor; because he is George McClellan, and because he deserves and will get the thanks of the people of New York and their votes."

On Thursday the Mayor will speak in German at the Terrace Garden meeting. The same night he will address a meeting of Hungarians in Second Street. He will speak in Italian Friday night in Terrace Garden, and in German again the same night at Zeltner's Hall, in the Bronx.

RIDDER HOST TO McCLELLAN.

Mayor Dines with Other Nominees at the Manhattan Club.

Mayor McClellan was the guest of honor at a dinner at the Manhattan Club last night by Herman Ridder.

Among the other guests were Herman A. Metz, nominee for Controller; Patrick F. McGowan, nominee for President of the Board of Aldermen; Corporation Counsel John J. Delany, Justice William J. Amend, Herman Boerner, H. R. Hirsch, Otto Hubach, Clemens Hunnewinckell, Norbert Kantor, Julius Krause, Henry H. Meyer, Franz Rackaw, Franz Richter, Bernard H. Ridder, Henry Ridder, George Von Skal, S. Louis Schnitzer, Felix Senff, Caspar Steurenburg, Max Wiederhold, and George Zeydel.

RUSH TO HELP JEROME.

This will be a day of rest for Mr. Jerome, probably the last he will have before election. He intends to stay at home all day and get all he can out of it to make himself fit for the lightning campaign planned for this week. His throat has improved greatly in the last two days, notwithstanding the strain on it, and from now on the District Attorney will swing into his old gait, unhampered by trouble.

Mr. Jerome will speak at eight meetings between to-morrow and Friday night, beginning the first evening with a set of three. His start to-morrow night will be at 49 Henry Street, where he is booked to speak at 8 o'clock. Forty-five minutes later he will appear at the Amsterdam Opera House, Forty-fourth Street and Ninth Avenue; and at 9:45 o'clock he will make his last speech for the night at Majestic Hall, 125 East 125th Street. On Tuesday night he will speak only once—at Colonial Hall, 101st Street and Columbus Avenue.

Of the thousand letters containing praise and indorsement which have reached Mr. Jerome since he opened headquarters, none has given him more pleasure than one sent him yesterday by William J. Walsh, business representative of the Electrical Workers' Union No. 3 and Secretary of the committee appointed by the Associated Building Trades to investigate the charges supposed to have been made by the District Attorney against the labor leaders of this city. After telling how he went to the meeting at Groll's Hall on Oct. 14 and listened together with the other walking delegates to Mr. Jerome's address and answers, Walsh wrote:

I went to that meeting as your enemy, but after listening to your side of the issue I am now convinced of your honest endeavor to do your duty as District Attorney, and I am now your friend instead of your foe. And I shall also try to explain to my fellow-workers how I have become converted.

Walsh concluded by expressing the conviction that an overwhelming majority of the labor representatives present at the Groll's Hall meeting felt then, and are now feeling, just as he does.

The response to the appeal for campaign funds sent out by the Jerome Committee has surpassed even the most roseate hopes. William R. Corwine received 425 checks at the Gilsey House headquarters within the thirty-six hours between the mailing of the circular and last night. Those checks represented an aggregate contribution of nearly $10,000. Before that, more than $9,000 had come in. The checks ranged from $5 to $250.

Small cash contributions are received every day from men in the humblest walks of life. Most of them refuse their names. A youngster who could not be of age came in last night.

"It's payday, and I thought I'd offer a tithe to the cause," he said, as he handed a $1 bill to Mr. Corwine. Asked for his name, he blushed and replied:

"Oh, I'm just a salesman."

Last Friday night a laboring man insisted on handing the same amount to John A. Henneberry. The chief lieutenant of Mr. Jerome looked long at the man and hesitated, seeing that he was actually ragged. But the man would not be denied.

"It's for the kind of me he's workin'—ain't he?" he said, and walked out.

Contributions have come from all corners of the country. Portland, Ore., is the most distant place so far heard from. A Boston man sent in a five-dollar bill yesterday. Philadelphia and Baltimore have been heard from several times. A well-known Wall Street lawyer sent a check for $100, explaining that a client of his at Pittsburg had asked that such a contribution be made on his behalf.

William F. King, who is doing volunteer work for Mr. Jerome, said last night that the committee would not rest until they had enough money to send a postal card with a marked sample ballot in miniature fac simile on it to every voter in Manhattan and the Bronx.

George Haven Putnam, Frederick Nathan, W. R. Peters, and Antonio Knauth have organized a special Jerome campaign committee for the Nineteenth Assembly District. They intend to make a house-to-house campaign.

Edward Schneider, Secretary of the William S. Devery Association, applied yesterday for lithograph portraits of Mr. Jerome to be distributed in the Ninth district, where the Deveries and the Sheehans grow and flow.

A merchant wrote yesterday asking for campaign buttons. "I have fifty workmen in my factory," he wrote, "and I would like to pin a button on the coat of every one of them."

WOMEN WANT HIM TO TALK.

They Have Forgiven a Scolding Jerome Gave Them Four Years Ago.

An invitation extended to Mr. Jerome and William M. Ivins, Republican candidate for Mayor of New York, to speak before a meeting of the Woman's Republican Club at Delmonico's next Tuesday morning, is causing many anxious moments for members of the latter organization. The invitations were sent almost two weeks ago. So far the club has not received a reply.

Now the invitation to Mr. Jerome, so the members say, expresses deeper significance than the single honor he would pay them to speak before their meeting. It means a peace treaty between Mr. Jerome and the representatives of certain New York women's clubs. It means that Mr. Jerome has been forgiven for having scolded the women in his last campaign for going too deeply into politics and admonishing them not to take themselves too seriously.

Mr. Jerome, so the members say, is a bit old-fashioned about some things, and this was one of them. Some of them at the time of the scolding resented having a young man give them pointers of this kind. But that was four years ago, and some of the women in explaining, say they have only availed themselves of a feminine privilege of changing their minds.

"I don't care if Mr. Jerome did give our enthusiasm a cold bath once," said a member yesterday. "We admire him and we all hope he will be elected. He has unchangeable convictions, and what woman but doesn't admire that in a man."

"A campaign is going on among every woman's club for Mr. Jerome," said a member yesterday. "Every woman I have talked with is heart and soul for Jerome. It is not a question whether he agrees with our ideas of woman's club work. The vital thing to consider is what Mr. Jerome has done for the good of the people. Every woman I know of is working for Jerome, and we all hope he will be elected."

JEROME LAST ON THE BALLOT.

Hearst's and the Two Socialist Tickets Come Before His.

A proof of the official ballot not meant for outsiders' eyes came under the observation of a TIMES reporter yesterday. It showed the arrangement of tickets—already foreshadowed by THE TIMES—with District Attorney Jerome put last of all. Next to the black square indicating his column appears the emblem of one of the Socialist parties, then Hearst, and then the other Socialist wing.

All efforts to find who was responsible for the sample ballot were met with the reply that it had all been settled, and that as it was so it would remain. At the Board of Elections the supposition was still encouraged that the details of places on the ballot remain undecided.

GETTING THE INDEPENDENTS.

Harrison Democracy Thinks It Has 6,000 in Line for McClellan.

Francis Burton Harrison, President of the Citizens' Independent Democracy, announced last night at his headquarters in the Marlborough Hotel that the organization had men at work in every Assembly district in Manhattan and the Bronx getting independent Democrats in line for the McClellan ticket.

"We are getting responses from Democrats who never have been affiliated with Tammany and who never have worked with the regular Tammany organization," said Mr. Harrison. "We are confident that this class of Democrats will be with us.

"We also are appealing to conservative Republicans because a vote for Ivins is a vote for Hearst, and the real issue of the campaign is whether the people want Hearst and anarchy or McClellan and a conservative, honest, business government."

William Harman Black, Commissioner of Accounts and Vice President of the Citizens' Independent Democracy, declared that already the organization had enrolled upward of 6,000 members, representing every Assembly district in New York.

in a small degree in carrying out his policy and instructions. I refer to Mr. John Hay, our late Secretary of State. [Applause.]

"Mr. Lowell said forty years ago that it was a misfortune of American biography that it must needs be more or less provincial. What he said was true then. A few great Americans have passed the confines of our territorial limits and had made themselves known and felt abroad. Washington, Franklin, Hamilton, and Lincoln were almost as well known across the Atlantic as they were at home, but what Mr. Lowell said was in a practical sense literally true.

"It is not true to-day. Mr. Hay stands upon a pedestal that commands the attention of the world, and his fame will be one of the heritages, not alone of his own country, but of all the other countries with which he had to do. His is one of the names that will stand imperishable upon the banner of America and the world.

"I shall never forget the ceremonies in his honor in England at the time of his death. They were the most impressive I have ever seen, and they told of his power and his influence in the world."

"There is another instance of the growth and power and standing of the United States that I cannot refrain from referring to, and that is the last great achievement of our youthful President at Washington. [Applause.] With the sympathy and the prestige of the 80,000,000 of his fellow citizens he commanded peace between the two great warring nations in the East. I don't see how one man could have rendered greater service, not alone to his own country, but to the whole world than that which Mr. Roosevelt rendered on that occasion."

"Another thing I have observed is the growth and instinct for public service, the growth of a real and wholesome public spirit among the young men of America. That is one of the things we used to be lacking in. I can remember the time when it was not thought to be desirable that young men should give themselves up to politics and to public service, but now all over the country the feeling is to the contrary, and I think you can find that the young men of all parties, especially the young men of character, education, and ability, are willing to give themselves up to the service of their country.

"Much as we may praise and honor specific services for which we give our President the credit, I submit that his general influence in this wholesome and important direction is even of still greater value. I believe the United States now occupies the most hopeful position of all the nations of the world."

Incident Closed—Murphy.

Charles F. Murphy announced at Tammany Hall yesterday that the Jerome controversy was a "closed incident." Asked if he had any reply to make to the speech made by the District Attorney at the meeting in Zeltner's Hall, the Bronx, the night before, he said:

"I think that Jerome has proved our case. So far as we are concerned the affair is a closed incident."

Mr. Murphy said he knew nothing about any action against the Hearst petition, except that the Law Committee was looking into the matter. Speaking of the Hearst charge that there are "floaters" in the Eighteenth District, of which he is leader, Mr. Murphy said if there were floaters there he could not help it.

A letter was received at the hall from the Public Hack Owners' Union, 2,500 strong, announcing that they had indorsed the entire Democratic ticket, from Mayor McClellan down. A similar communication came from the Independent Boss Butchers' Association.

RIGHTS OF PROPERTY SACRED, SAYS HEARST

Those of the Public Not Less Than Individuals.

DENIES CONFISCATION PLAN

Speaks at Two Meetings and Quotes London's Example in the Way of Municipal Ownership.

William R. Hearst drew great cheers from two large audiences last night by declaring his firm belief in the rights of property, and that there was no programme of confiscation in his plan to bring about municipal ownership of public utilities.

The two meetings were held in Harlem, one in the Twenty-first Assembly District, a Republican stronghold, the other in the Twenty-third Assembly District, of which First Deputy Police Commissioner McAvoy is leader. At both meetings there was a large proportion of small business men and professional men. Mr. Hearst was enthusiastically received at both.

Mr. Hearst on his way to the first of the two meetings, which was held at Cosmopolitan Hall, One Hundred and Sixty-eighth Street and Amsterdam Avenue, hung on to a strap in a crowded Subway car with one hand and with the other shook hands with fellow-passengers who happened to recognize him and wished him success. Twice on the way there were cheers for "the next Mayor of New York."

John J. Hopper, a brother of Isaac A. Hopper, who is Superintendent of Buildings under Mayor McClellan and a Tammany district leader, presided at the meeting in Cosmopolitan Hall. It was long after 9 o'clock when Mr. Hearst was heralded by a series of cheers in the street. J. G. Phelps Stokes, candidate for President of the Board of Aldermen on the Hearst ticket, was in the midst of a speech extolling municipal ownership when Mr. Hearst entered the hall.

"There is the man who can bring to the people of New York public ownership of public utilities," said Mr. Stokes, pointing to Mr. Hearst. In a moment the audience was on its feet cheering. These cheers grew stronger as Mr. Hopper introduced Mr. Hearst.

A Few Empty Seats.

For the first time since he began his campaign Mr. Hearst was confronted with a few empty seats. The hall probably could hold about 2,000 persons, and only about 1,800 were present. The candidate for Mayor spoke extemporaneously, without any attempt at oratorical flights, but with better effect than at any previous meeting. He evinced perfect composure and seemed to feel completely at ease with his audience.

Mr. Hearst spoke in part as follows:

"My friends, I have made many speeches in this campaign declaring our principles and outlining our policies, and I hope you have seen some of them in print. To-night I want to make only a business talk to you on the practical side of municipal ownership.

"Those opposed to us—and they are mostly political bosses or the heads of corporations holding public franchises—seem to have nothing to say against us except that our policies are radical and unsound. We stand for honesty and efficiency in public office. There is nothing unsound about that. [Applause.]

"We are against thieving in public office by the puppets who occupy their places at the behest of the bosses and the corporations that control the bosses. There is nothing unsound about that. [Applause.]

"We stand for the retention of the public properties which belong to the people. That means an adequate water supply in the near future and a good and pure gas supply at half the present price. We stand for such public ownership as will bring about immeasurably improved transit facilities, with cheaper fares and revenues enough to help reduce the taxes and aid in erecting public schools enough to give every child a seat. There is nothing unsound about that. [Applause.]

Property Rights Sacred.

"A safe programme for municipal ownership is to treat public property as one would one's individual property. Property rights are sacred—we admit that, every fair-minded man must admit that—but we declare that the property rights of the whole people are not less sacred than the property rights of the individual, and that seems to be the principal difference between us and our opponents.

"The officials who represent you—or rather misrepresent you—have given away many valuable franchises. Now, that has already been done, and there is use crying over spilled milk. There is no confiscation in this municipal ownership platform.

"We intend, however, to retain the valuable franchises that have not as yet been given away. The Gas Trust has franchises which have lapsed and others that it never had any rights to, and there are nineteen subway franchises to be disposed of in the next four years, and if you elect us we mean to see that those are preserved for the benefit of the people. And there is nothing unsound about that. [Applause.]

"I want to cite an example to show how municipal ownership of street cars might have worked had the franchises been retained for the people. The Metropolitan Street Railway owns and operates about eighteen or twenty lines, some of these leased.

"The capital stock of the company is placed at about $200,000,000. Most of this, however, is wind and water. The entire cost of construction and rolling stock is not more than $80,000,000. In other words, there are 25 per cent. of real value and 75 per cent. of water. And that water, my friends, represents value you have given the property by simply living here in New York.

What City Could Have Done.

"The Metropolitan Company thus has paid some $10,000,000 in interest on bonds and stocks, after paying its taxes. If these franchises had been kept, the city could have borrowed $40,000,000, enough to build the entire system, at a rate of interest of 3½ per cent. That would have left 8½ per cent. a year for improvement of the property, extension, increase of the employes' wages, and still there would have been something left, allowing for a decrease in taxes or for the building of public schools, which we need so badly just now.

"The London County Council owns and operates tramways, ferries, lighting plants, steamboats, and model tenements. No one thinks of calling municipal ownership unsound there, and yet London is the largest city in the world. I believe the greatest city we have to-day right here. The London County Council operates 100 miles of street railways. The balance in favor of the City of London last year was $911,345.

"In London last year 82,000,000 passengers paid 3-cent fares and 63,000,000 passengers 1-cent fares. We have been talking about 3-cent fares here, and that is called anarchy. Now I want to propose to you a mathematical problem: If a 3-cent fare means anarchy, what does a 1-cent fare mean?"

"Excellent business," cried some one in the audience.

"In my opinion that is the correct answer," replied Mr. Hearst. "It would be most excellent business and most excellent Government. And now, my friends, if you think it is possible to bring this about on a legitimate business basis, and you put us into office—"

Cries of "We will. We will!"

"—that is what we propose to do for you. I want to ask you to help us to do this. Vote the straight ticket. We will be opposed by some of the wealthiest and some of the most cunning men in this country. See to it that there are no weak spots in the make-up of our next City Government."

Cheering crowds followed Mr. Hearst from the hall to an Amsterdam Avenue car. At the Lion Palace Mr. Hearst was cheered for five minutes by an audience that jammed the spacious hall to the doors, while another crowd was clamoring in vain for admission. Mr. Hearst repeated his earlier speech at this hall.

Ex-Senator Ford, candidate for Controller, and Clarence J. Shearn, candidate for District Attorney on the Hearst ticket, spoke at both meetings.

HEARST OFFERS $1,000.

Reward for a Case of Illegal Registration in Murphy's District.

Following the offer made in his speech at Arlington Hall on Friday night, William R. Hearst posted notices at his headquarters in the Hoffman House yesterday offering $1,000 reward for the first arrest and conviction of any person for illegal registration in the gashouse district, where Charles F. Murphy, the Tammany leader, lives.

A corps of Hearst investigators went to work yesterday inspecting the registration lists in the Sixth, Eighth, and Eighteenth Assembly Districts. Mr. Hearst has announced his intention of offering rewards for the arrest and conviction of persons illegally registered in these districts.

The Hearst managers declare that their reports indicate attempts at colonization on a large scale in Mr. Murphy's district, and also in the Sixth and Eighth. They say that warrants will be sworn out for a number of floaters in these districts.

Ex-Controller Bird S. Coler, Mr. Hearst's candidate for Borough President in Brooklyn, was at the Hoffman House headquarters yesterday, and gave out a statement about Mayor McClellan's assertion that there was only $40,000,000 available, and that this would be needed for schools and various other public purposes, and that there would not be money enough for the municipal ownership candidates, if they were elected, to carry out their contracts. Mr. Coler said:

"He knows very well that there are many ways upon which money can be found for any legitimate purpose. I have been brought up on the debt limit question, and know it probably more thoroughly than any other man in the city, and I think my word will go against the word of any one in the lobby ring; that we can fund every debt, and more, too."

Mr. Coler also said that the Mayor was playing into the hands of the water combine.

NOT FOR HEARST, THEY SAY.

Sheehan's Followers Repudiate Indorsement—Declare for McClellan.

About thirty of the Executive Committeemen of the Greater New York Democracy met at 134 West Twenty-fifth Street last night, and, after hearing how several of their fellow-members, acting in the name of their organization, had indorsed the Hearst ticket, took it all back and passed a resolution praising the administration of Mayor McClellan and indorsing him for re-election.

John C. Sheehan, leader of the organization, caused the Secretary to read a letter which he received on Friday from Sebastian Stock, the Executive Committeeman from the Seventeenth Assembly District.

Mr. Stock wrote that he was in the Hoffman House on Thursday night, and that while there he met John T. Cronin, Dr. J. H. Byrne, James B. Lyon, and Marcus Mayer, who, he said, told him that although they had had no meeting, they intended to inform the newspapers that they had. The result of the meeting that did not take place, he said, was a story that the Greater New York Democracy had indorsed the Municipal Ownership League's candidates.

J. B. A. Mullaly, Collector of Taxes and Assessments in the Controller's office, made a speech in which he said that W. R. Hearst was a candidate "whose own journal was his trumpet," and that Mr. McClellan had given to the city the cleanest administration in its history.

The meeting then adjourned.

TO BAR HEARST TICKET FROM PARTY COLUMN

McCarren Men Argue Before the Elections Board.

RIGHT TO EMBLEM DISPUTED

Protestants Say Also That Signers of Nominating Petitions Had Voted as Enrolled Republicans.

There was a lively hearing yesterday before the Board of Elections of protests against the candidates of the Municipal Ownership League. These protests included the city, county, and borough candidates, the general allegation being that they should not have been grouped together in the column under the party emblem of a pair of scales and the party name—the Municipal Ownership League.

The members of the League might have been as individuals properly nominated by petition for the several offices, say the protestants, but the contention of their lawyers was, that under the law the League's candidates should appear on the ballot in the column following the regular party nominations with the League's emblem above each name, or, as has been provided by law, with black lines an eighth of an inch wide, separating them from the rest of the ticket.

Lawyers present in the interest of the Municipal Ownership League protested against either proposition. Lawyers who had been employed by somebody to protest, insisted.

It having been denied by Thomas F. Smith, Secretary of Tammany Hall, that the protesting attorneys represented the organization, Isaac M. Kapper of Brooklyn, in his protest, chiefly directed at Bird S. Coler, said very positively at yesterday's hearing that he represented the regular Democratic Party. Luke D. Stapleton, also of Brooklyn, was associated with him as an attorney for the protestants, numbering one hundred. The two attorneys are strong McCarren men. McCarren is supposed to be in harmony with Tammany Hall.

After tilts with the attorneys representing the Municipal Ownership League, H. M. Stimson, Melville G. Palliser, and Thomas Gilleran, it was decided by the Board of Elections that the attorneys representing the protestants could present as late as 10 o'clock Monday morning further affidavits to prove that men who had signed petitions for Bird S. Coler's nomination on the municipal ticket had previously exercised their primary rights and voted as Republicans for the nomination of Justice Joseph A. Burr, a Republican, for Supreme Court Justice of the Second Department. Justice Burr was also nominated by the Municipal Ownership people for the same office.

Mr. Kapper said that the whole ticket was illegal in many ways. It had been so arranged, he said, that the "riff-raff could tag on under an emblem that the law had provided to protect the illiterate voter." The law was specific in declaring that the emblem and party name was by right of priority, and that either Justice Burr had the right to it, or the nominees of the Carnegie meeting which nominated William R. Hearst for Mayor, John Ford for Controller, and J. G. Phelps Stokes for President of the Board of Aldermen. He declared that somebody had committed larceny in grabbing the emblem and the name of the party. The Municipal Ownership League members had, he said, rushed in pell mell with their certificates of nomination by petition, and the first man there had been put on the Hearst ticket for whatever office he wanted. Justice Burr's certificate of nomination had been filed at Albany, with the party emblem, previous to the Hearst nomination. One or the other had the right to it.

Michael J. Dady of the Board objected to the term "riff-raff." Mr. Kapper took it back, saying he was speaking not of the men on the ticket, but of possible riff-raff that might get on a ticket gathered as, he said, that had been.

Mr. Stapleton, his associate, then read from the statutes. He admitted that there had been violations of the law in previous elections, through nominations by petition, but said that the law was very positive in its assertion that independent candidates for office must be placed separately on the ballot unless they had been nominated together.

Mr. Palliser made a short speech in which he said that the meeting at Carnegie Hall had been thoroughly regular, the candidates there being legally nominated, and that a committee had been appointed at the meeting to receive acceptances of the other nominations on the ticket. The populace was showing its disapproval of the old leaders in an emphatic way, he declared, and Tammany was trying to save its ticket by splitting the leading candidates from their devoted followers, also in nomination by petition.

It was urged that if the ballots must be printed with each independent candidate's name beneath his party emblem and the name of his party, that one ballot would extend from one Assembly district to another. This the McCarren attorneys would not admit.

Mr. Kapper said that he had already more than 900 names of persons who had signed the Coler petition, all of whom, were regularly registered Republicans, who had previously exercised their primary rights.

He said that there was a force of thirty men now at work digging out from the names of the petitioners those who under the law had no right to sign such a petition.

The protest against Fred Ostermann, George W. Hayden, and Edgar N. Pryor, who were nominated as Aldermen in the Twenty-third, Twenty-fifth, and Twenty-fourth Districts of New York, was stricken off the list for error.

MINING OFFICIAL ARRESTED.

Dr. W. R. Brown Held in Boston—Is Wanted in Philadelphia.

BOSTON, Oct. 21.—Dr. William R. Brown, Secretary of the North Platte Copper Mining and Smelting Company of Douglas, Wyoming, was arrested in this city to-day on a warrant charging him with being a fugitive from justice from Philadelphia.

With L. E. Pusey of Philadelphia, it is said, Brown was indicted in Philadelphia on Oct. 2 on a charge of larceny in connection with the financial affairs of the company, which was organized at Douglas in June, 1901. Receivership proceedings have been instituted in this city, Philadelphia, and Douglas.

Dr. Brown will oppose extradition.

QUEER MUDDLE IN QUEENS.

Municipal Ownership League Men Blame Borough President Cassidy.

At the meeting of the Board of Elections to be held on Monday to decide on cases of protest against candidates for the coming elections, a story of singular doings in Queens County politics is to be told. Joseph Bermel and Stephen J. Clancy both say they are the candidates of the Municipal Ownership League.

According to Melvin G. Palliser, who will tell the story to the members of the Board of Elections, Borough President Cassidy was renominated by Tammany Hall. Thinking it advisable to have a candidate whom he believed he could best, Mr. Palliser says he dickered with the Republicans and obtained the nomination of Joseph Bermel to run against him.

Mr. Bermel believes in municipal ownership and obtained 2,000 petitions for his nomination on the Municipal Ownership League ticket. Mr. Cassidy, finding two parties against him, according to Mr. Palliser, sought out Stephen J. Clancy, who obtained 2,000 signatures to nominate Clancy on the Municipal Ownership League ticket. The board is to decide on Monday whether Clancy or Bermel is the real candidate of the Municipal Ownership League.

Mr. Bermel has forwarded his letter of acceptance of the nomination for Borough President to B. Frank Wood, Chairman of the Notification Committee of the Republican Convention. Mr. Bermel charges that Borough President Cassidy's administration has been wasteful and that of the money spent little has gone to the actual workers. He closes with a sweeping declaration for municipal ownership.

The Democratic campaign in Queens was opened last night by a big mass meeting in the Astoria Assembly Rooms, Borough President Cassidy being the principal speaker. He told of the stand taken by Mayor McClellan to add an appropriation of $100,000 to the budget for improvements in Queens.

TOLD TO VOTE FOR WEAVER.

Policemen Testify That They Were Threatened with Dismissal.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 21.—The committee appointed by Select Council to investigate the conduct of the city departments resumed its sessions to-day. At the first meeting an effort was made by the investigators to prove through Superintendent of Police Taylor that under the reform administration of Mayor Weaver the police are active in politics. It was testified to-day that Taylor had instructed policemen how to vote.

An ex-policeman said that after twenty-nine years' service he resigned on Oct. 9 because his Lieutenant intimated that if he did not support Mayor Weaver he might as well give up his position. An ex-Sergeant said he resigned on Oct. 7. He had received notice to attend a meeting of municipal employes in the interest of the administration. He declined to go because he was opposed to the Mayor. The following day he was ordered to appear before the Police Board so that the medical examiners could report upon his eyesight. He thereupon resigned.

There was a hearing to-day in the case of William S. Smith, James Hines, Joseph R. Burns, and Benjamin Jacobson, who comprised the Election Board in the Second Precinct of the Second Ward at the election last February, and who are charged with having assessed and voted men not citizens. Forty witnesses testified that they are not citizens, but are marked as having voted on the precinct checking list. The defendants were held in $800 bail each.

Mayor to Speak in German.

Magistrate Charles G. F. Wahle, President of the German Democracy, has completed arrangements for a German mass meeting in Terrace Garden next Thursday night, Oct. 26. Mayor McClellan will address the meeting in German, as will Herman A. Metz, the candidate for Controller, and James W. Osborne, candidate for District Attorney.

FLAMMER CAN'T WITHDRAW.

He Could Have, Twenty Days Before Election, but the Time Has Passed.

Talk of the possibility of Charles A. Flammer, the Republican candidate for District Attorney, withdrawing from the Republican ticket was ridiculed at Republican Headquarters yesterday. The lawyers of the committee said that such action on Mr. Flammer's part was not possible now. The law provides that all withdrawals from a regularly nominated ticket must be made at least twenty days previous to the day of election. That time is past, so Mr. Flammer's name will be printed on the official ballot, whether he wishes it or not.

TAFT ASSAILS COX; DEFENDS RATE BILL

Bitter Condemnation of Cincinnati Boss, Foraker's Friend.

HEADS OF RAILROADS WARNED

Must Accept President's Plan or Radical Laws—Politicians Amazed at Attack on Boss.

Special to The New York Times.

AKRON, Ohio, Oct. 21.—Secretary of War Taft, spokesman of the National Administration, flung party harmony to the winds here to-night. Not content with a reply to Senator Foraker's attack on President Roosevelt's railroad rate policy, he launched an attack on George B. Cox, boss of Cincinnati and chief supporter of the Foraker Presidential boom.

Mr. Taft came to Ohio to support Gov. Herrick's candidacy, but it has been understood that it was his chief idea in leaving his busy desk at Washington, to strike back at the Senators who are fighting the President. In his speech he vigorously replied to arguments against conferring additional powers on the Inter-State Commerce Commission, in beginning he said:

"With the Democracy in the demoralized condition in which the victory of last year left it, one may thoughtlessly assign to this campaign no practical importance from a National standpoint, and may treat it as a purely State and local controversy. The error in doing so, however, would become very apparent should Gov. Herrick, the candidate on the Republican ticket for Governor, be defeated. It would then be heralded as the dawn of a new Democracy, significant of what was to happen in the next Congressional and the next Presidential elections.

"The truth is that to ons who studies the signs of the times it is perfectly apparent that Mr. Bryan is gradually resuming control over the Democratic Party and proposes to assume the aggressive in a controversy in which he hopes to array the poor against the rich, to shake the present syatem of private property and freedom of contract, to cripple the Federal courts that are now such a bulwark in ths defense of the Constitutional rights of individuals; to substitute for our present system of railways, privately owned and maintained, Government railways, and in every way to introduce a system of patsrnalism leaning toward Socialism, which in the end would certainly paralyze ths industrial and social progress of this country.

"This movement in favor of Government ownership of public utilities, to include ths commercial railroads, is not a mers chimera; it finds its beginning in the proposition for municipal ownership of street railways, by Mayor Dunne of Chicago; by Mayor McClellan of New York, and even still mors in the attitude of Mr. Hearst in running against Mr. McClellan. Mr. Hearst, in his attempt to become the Democratic candidate for President, had the sympathy of Mr. Bryan, and the attitude of Mr. Hearst is known of all men to be Socialistic in the extreme, and calculated to produce, as much as possible, a class feeling against tho rich or well to do on the part of the poor.

"It is the purposc, and always has been, of President Roosevelt, in the policies which he has recommended for adoption by Congress, to meet these dangerous attacks upon our present economic, social, and political conditions by remedying the actual evils which every one must recognize, and thus intrenching ourselves against the assaults of Socialism, the suppression of individualism, and the instigation of class hatred based on alleged injustice and abuses that do not exist.

"He has, therefore, been most activs in the promotion of prosecutions under the anti-trust law, and in the securing of legislation to aid in its enforcement. He believes, as every one must who knows anything about the subject, that perhaps the most serious abuse of the last two decades has been the unjust discrimination in railway rates as between individual shippers and as between different localities, and, indeed, in some instances by rates in excess of that which would be reasonable for the service itself.

Defends the President's Plan.

Mr. Taft then took up the plan of Mr. Roosevelt to give to the Inter-State Commerce Commission power to fix maximum railway rates and enforce them, and replied to objections made by Senator Foraker. He said in part:

"The proposition that an Inter-State Commerce Commission under the Esch-Townsend amendment, or the President's proposed amendments, exercising their powers in the same manner and under the same procedure as the present Inter-State Commerce Commission, would initiate by wholesale a table of rates for all the railways of the country, in advance of complaints, and would thus transfer the management of the ratemaking from the railway company to the Inter-State Commerce Commission, is absolutely absurd. It is not to be supposed for one moment that Congress would intend or that any board would attempt such an impossible and futile task.

"The President's proposition is that the power of the commission should be to hear a complaint that a particular rate is unreasonable and to fix the rate which should be reasonable, and embody this finding in an order which should stand unless set aside by a court, either upon preliminary or final hearing.

"His plan does not involve the wholesale fixing or initiating of rates by the Inter-State Commerce Commission, and the assumption that it does by those who oppose his proposition justifies the inference that they are setting up straw men to be knocked down in discussion.

"Another objection is that the railroad company may be made, by an order of an irresponsible body like the commission, to lose large sums without any hope of recovering them, by furnishing transportation at rates which afterward under judicial investigation are shown to be unreasonably low.

"It is difficult to see why there should not be attached to the finding of a commission, experienced as such a commission would become in the exercise of its jurisdiction, at least prima facie correctness. Indeed, one may fairly protest against the contemptuous manner in which reference is made by railroad Presidents to the value and weight of a decision of the Inter-State Commerce Commission. The lack of respect for such a tribunal sedulously cultivated in some quarters is the direct outgrowth of the manner in which the railroad companies have treated their decisions.

"It is said that the railroads have been bad in the past, but that they are now good and are going to be good hereafter, and this is looked upon as an argument why we should not change the law so as make it more effective. The admitted truth is that the railroads in the past have intentionally given rebates to individuals, and have thus ruined their competitors, and that the giving of rebates was so general during the decade last past that very few railroads were exempt from it.

"That giving rebates has ceased to be so general a practice is undoubtedly true, but whether it will return when business grows dull and competition between the railroads grows intense in case of business depression no one can tell.

"I do not look for any great revolution to be effected by these amendments proposed by the President. The present Inter-State commerce law has done much good. As amended it will do much more good. This good will be apparent when after the tribunal has been operating with its new powers for a number of years, confidence in its ability and fairness shall be felt by both shippers and railway men. The belief that a speedy remedy may be had for any injury done will work wonders in the contentment of the public with the management of railways.

"The President's recommendations for amendment to the inter-State commerce law, while they have received the full support of the Republican majority in the House, have not yet passed the Senate, and there are indications that the extended and able arguments of the counsel for railway corporations and their Presidents before that committee have had weight to make some of the Republican members of that body conscientiously hesitate to follow the President's policy.

Attack on Cox Machine.

Mr. Taft then turned to State issues, and asked Republicans to support Gov. Herrick. He replied to the attacks on the Governor by the temperance elements. He then took up the charge that Mr. Herrick is subservient to George B. Cox and the Republican machine of Cincinnati, saying:

"In the flights of oratory of our Democratic friends, reference has been made to Herrick as a 'hoss,' and as such he is classed with Cox. Now, I wish to come as near telling what I believe to be the truth as I can on this subject.

"It is the natural result of ambition for office to organize one's friends as an effective force to secure it, and where there is a party organization and the leader shows himself, it is natural for that party organization to stand by the leader. I am speaking of things as they are, not perhaps as they ought to be in the ideal republic, in which the office seeks the man. Therefore, I do not hesitate to dismiss as not worthy of consideration the charge against Gov. Herrick that he is a 'hoss' in the opprobious sense of that term.

"There is very little resemblance between the so-called machine of the State and that of Hamilton County. The Hamilton County machine is the result of from fifteen to twenty years' labor by George B. Cox, a man of great executive talent and political sagacity. Beginning with the politics of the ward, he has created a political organization in the city of Cincinnati and the County of Hamilton, founded on the cohesive power of the public patronage, which operates as smoothly to control the nominations and elections in the city and county as a nicely adjusted Corliss engine.

"The whole government of both county and city are absolutely under his control, and every Republican political convention nominates the men whom he dictates. The organization is carried far beyond the mere preparation for conventions and embraces the strictest discipline among the cohorts in bringing out a full vote on each election day.

"The Government under the machine is constantly described as a very corrupt one. Such a Government generally begets corruption. But if it exists in Cincinnati it seems difficult to secure legal or practical proof of it sufficient to convince the voters. There is probably not more corruption in Cincinnati than in many other cities not particularly well governed.

"The importance of suppressing open and notorious graft in order to prevent defeat at the polls is known to the engineer of the machine and he has perhaps exercised his power to suppress ths inevitable tendency in such a machine. But the power secured by the boss and his assistants under the machine has undoubtedly inured to their pecuniary benefit, and it is seen in the large fortunes which they now have.

"How their money was made has not been disclosed. The large public utility corporations seem to regard the boss as a conserving influence, and are content to have the control of the machine continue as it is, because they regard themselves as thus insured against disturbance in thsir franchisss.

Roosevelt Not a Cox Man.

"The condition is one of absolute helplessness on the part of any independent Republican seeking to take part in politics and to act independently of the machine; and the distressing effect is now seen upon all the young men ambitious politically, as it either drives them out of politics and deprives the public of their probably valuable services, of if they go into politics they must subordinate themselves to the tyrannny of the boss.

"It is a condition of affairs—a local despotism—much to be deplored, and if I had thought that by speaking and supporting Gov. Herrick to-night I should be doing anything for the perpetuation of the power of the Cox machine in Cincinnati, or if I thought that Gov. Herrick had entered into the corrupt bargain with Cox as charged, I should not be here.

"But the truth is that this machine, if it is to broken up, must be broken up by the voters of Cincinnati and Hamilton County themselves. This is an end devoutly to be wished, but it will take the hardest kind of work in the city itself. The machine cannot be defeated from the outside.

"Cox and his subordinates represent the regular Republican organization in Hamilton County. No one else can lawfully claim to do so, and they must be admitted to every Republican State and National Convention as such representatives until lawfully defeated at the primaries in Hamilton County.

"Now then, the fact that they may support a particular candidate for Governor is no more to be taken against him as indicative, without other evidence, that he will assist the machine in maintaining its power in Cincinnati than was the fact that the same machine supported Theodore Roosevelt is indicative that Theodore Roosevelt is a Cox man. It is a new doctrine in American politics that a man is to be defeated because of the character of some of those who vote for him. If I were able, as I fear I shall not be, because public duty calls me elsewhere, to cast my vote in Cincinnati in the coming election, I should vote against the municipal ticket nominated by the Republican organization, and for the State ticket."

DISMAY AMONG OHIO MEN.

They Declare Taft Has Made an Attack on Foraker.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—There was a genuine sensation among Ohio men here when the report came that Secretary Taft had made an attack on "Boss" Cox's machine. All agreed that it was directed at Senator Foraker.

"The Republican Party has gone to the devil," said one dismayed Ohio Republican when he heard the news.

That Mr. Taft speaks for the Administration is nowhere doubted. The participation of the Cabinet in this campaign has been the subject of much discussion at the White House. While Mr. Taft is denouncing bossism in Ohio, Mr. Bonaparte is attacking it in Maryland. The attitude of the Administration in regard to the campaigns in Ohio, Maryland, and Pennsylvania is regarded here as indicating unity of purpose and a definite line of policy.

Ohio men are generally much depressed over Taft's speech, because prior to that event Republican politics in that State were in a condition of unusual harmony. Since the convention Senators Dick and Foraker and "Boss" Cox had apparently buried all differences, and it was understood that all were agreed on Foraker for President in 1908. Foraker lives in Cincinnati, and they have usually trained together. It was Cox who went to Foraker's rescue when the Hanna men threatened to keep him off the delegation at large to the National Convention of 1904. Cox is regarded as Foraker's chief backer for the Presidential nomination.

The general impression here has been for some time that the President does not intend any longer to affect to be deceived by the surface friendship of anti-Administration Senators, and that when he is covertly attacked he will respond with a blow in the open.

CALLS IT DEMOCRATIC GRAB.

Bonaparte Denounces Maryland Suffrage Amendment.

RISING SUN, Md., Oct. 21.—At a largely attended Republican meeting here to-day Secretary of the Navy Charles J. Bonaparte delivered an address which was devoted chiefly to a denunciation of the proposed amendment to the State Constitution to limit the suffrage, which will be voted on at the November election.

After declaring that the purpose of the amendment was to turn the State over to the Democratic machine, which, he said, had stolen seven of the Electoral votes of Maryland from Roosevelt and Fairbanks, he said:

"To tell the meaning of the adoption of the Poe amendment as it will affect National issues is an easy job for a second-class prophet. If it be adopted the eight Electoral votes of Maryland are forever assured to the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, whoever he may be, and whatever may be the sentiments and wishes of the people of Maryland."

AFTER BANK OFFICIALS.

Prompt Action in the Case of the Enterprise at Pittsburg.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 21.—Fully $100,000 of notes held by the Enterprise National Bank when it closed have been paid off at the Bank of Pittsburg, through which the Enterprise formerly made its clearings. This fact was admitted to-day by Examiner Cunningham.

Action will be taken on Monday morning to bring to light the vast political scandal, and proceedings will be brought against the officers of the bank for allowing these notes to be lifted.

A signed statement was issued to-day by John B. Cunningham, who is in charge of the defunct bank, stating that so far as he is concerned, no confession made by Clark, the dead cashier, has been found. "Bull" Andrews of New Mexico, who, it was asserted, had been implicated by Clark in his alleged confession, declares that he is wholly innocent of any wrongdoing. He says that if any paper belonging to the Pennsylvania Development Company is found in the Enterprise Bank it was placed there by Clark, and not authorized by the company. He added, however, that the company would pay all such notes.

MOTHER-IN-LAW CALLS.

She Visits Mr. Dykeman's Office to Give Him a Strapping.

Frederick Dykeman was at his desk in the office of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, 30 Gold Street, yesterday, when the door flew open and in came his mother-in-law, Mrs. Elizabeth B. Thompson of 319 Division Street, Brooklyn.

The mother-in-law apparently was in a rage. She rushed upon Mr. Dykeman, raised a hand in which was a heavy strap and shouted:

"I'll expose you. You've slandered me."

The strap was just about to descend when a score of clerks and stenographers rushed to the rescue of Mr. Dykeman, whose mother-in-law was presently ejected from the office. By way of explanation Mr. Dykeman said afterward:

"About two years ago I married her daughter. Ever since my mother-in-law has been trying to separate us. We have had to move and keep our whereabouts a secret. A short time ago I wrote and said I didn't want to have anything more to do with her. That, I suppose, is what incensed her."

Mr. Dykeman refused to give his home address, lest his mother-in-law might learn it.

MR. MacNUTT'S VINDICATION.

Pope Expressed Satisfaction, and Sent the American His Blessing.

From The London Times.

To the Editor of The Times:

In June last some sensation was caused in Rome, and much surprise among his many friends there and elsewhere, by the news that Mr. Francis MacNutt, a well-known American gentleman who had for some years occupied the post of Chamberlain at the Vatican, had been charged with a public misdemeanor, and the sensation and surprise were increased when, on the hearing of the case in one of the lower courts on July 18, the judgment given was unfavorable, though with exemption from penalty.

Against this judgment an appeal was at once entered, and the case was heard—this time fully and exhaustively—before the Roman Court of Appeal on the 9th inst., with the result that, as the evidence against the accused was found to rest entirely on the confused and contradictory statements of one injudicious policeman, the Public Prosecutor withdrew the charge; and, after a very brief deliberation, the court gave a judgment which is the fullest exoneration known in Italian law—namely, that the offense charged was non-existent. This result has met with general approval in Rome, where it had been felt that the accused was the victim, first of a blundering police officer, and afterward of a judicial error.

The Holy Father, moreover, who had never believed the charge, has expressed, with an assurance of his sympathy, his great satisfaction at this final judgment, and has sent Mr. MacNutt his blessing. Not having seen any account of the judgment of the Court of Appeal in our English papers, I feel it my duty toward a much injured friend, whom I have known intimately and esteemed for more than twenty years, to ask you in your kindness to insert this letter. RIVER AFIRE.

Blazing Oil from a Lighter Threatens Ferryboats and Slips.

Passengers on the East River ferryboats and thousands of people on the Williamsburg Bridge saw the river afire yesterday midway between the Brooklyn Navy Yard and the Williamsburg Bridge. The fire was among 500 barrels of sugar and other merchandise, including some barrels of oil, on the lighter Joseph Coddingham. A tugboat was taking the lighter down the diver and the two boats were lashed together. When under the Williamsburg Bridge a fire was discovered on the lighter.

The captain of the tug signaled for assistance and the fireboats went to her aid. While they were fighting the blaze burning oil from the barrels on board ran into the river and set the surface of the water ablaze. The fireboat David Boody kept two streams directed on the river. Meanwhile the blazing oil was carried by the tide toward the ferry slip, and the ferryboats Colorado and Florida were kept outside of their slip until the oil fire was out.

WHOLE BRITISH EMPIRE DOES HONOR TO NELSON

Trafalgar Centenary Celebrations Ashore and Afloat.

IMMENSE CROWDS IN LONDON

LONDON, Oct. 21.—In every part of the British Empire to-day and wherever a British man-of-war floats, the one hundredth anniversary of Nelson's victory at Trafalgar over the combined fleets of France and Spain was celebrated.

Of all the ships of the navy at a given hour flags were dipped, while the bands played the "Dead March." Nelson's old flagship, the Victory, still lying in Portsmouth harbor, was decked from stem to stern with bunting, and thousands of electric lights were strung for the night illumination of the old battleship. It was proposed to illuminate the Nelson Monument in Trafalgar Square, here, but fearing a tremendous crush of people and accidents, the authorities forbade it.

In London the day's celebration began with the hoisting of national flags on the Nelson Column. Immense crowds assembled, and when Nelson's famous signal, "England expects this day that every man shall do his duty," was unfurled, a mighty cheer went up.

The day was cold and threatening, but this did not deter the people from coming out to participate in the celebration. Trafalgar Square, which was elaborately decorated, was naturally the centre to which all converged, and much interest was manifested in the thousands of wreaths from the colonies, provinces, and various cities of the empire which were piled in immense masses at the base of the Nelson Column. Among the tributes was a wreath inscribed:

"To the Memory of the Gallant Dead of France and Spain Who Lost Their Lives in the Great Conflict."

The column itself was covered with laurel streamers stretching from the top of the statue to the base.

The boys of the Naval Brigade arrived from Portsmouth in the morning, and after saluting the column placed on it a wreath from Admiral Togo.

The Navy League took charge of the celebrations in the afternoon, and besides the exercises at Trafalgar Square, similar ceremonies were held simultaneously under the league's auspices throughout the country. They consisted of special prayers and the singing of Kipling's "Recessional" and the National Anthem. In Trafalgar Square the National Anthem was played by massed bands, while the crowds which filled every corner of the big space joined in the singing.

Services which were all largely attended were held simultaneously in St. Paul's Cathedral, where Nelson is buried, and in other churches. To-morrow special services will be held in all the churches, those at St. Paul's Cathedral being of an official nature.

As a permanent recognition of the centenary the Navy League proposes to improve Trafalgar Square by increasing the statuary and erecting majestic fountains typifying Great Britain's naval successes.

The largest graving dock in the United Kingdom was opened to-day at Southampton and was named Trafalgar Dock. It is 250 feet longer than any vessel afloat.

CELEBRATION IN CANADA.

Trafalgar Day Observed Throughout the Dominion.

OTTAWA, Oct. 21.—Trafalgar Day was celebrated here, the school children going to Parliament Hill and placing a wreath at the foot of the statue of Queen Victoria. Speeches were delivered by Earl Grey and Secretary of State Scott.

A concert was given in the evening in St. George's Hall, at which R. L. Borden, leader of the Opposition, delivered an address.

The day was observed throughout the Dominion.

HALIFAX, N. S., Oct. 21.—In honor of Trafalgar Day, flags bearing Nelson's famous signal to his men are flying today on H. M. S. Drake, flagship of the Second Squadron, now at this port.

To-morrow Prince Louis of Battenberg and his staff will attend a special service in St. Paul's Church.

BRITONS MEET IN BOSTON.

Capt. Mahan Delivers an Address on Nelson's Career.

BOSTON, Oct. 21.—The British residents of Boston to-night crowded Tremont Temple at a meeting to celebrate the centenary of the battle of Trafalgar. The meeting was under the auspices of the Victorian Club and other societies. The guests of honor included Capt. A. T. Mahan, Commander Takeshita, and Admiral Sir Edward Hobart Seymour.

Prof. De Sumichrast of Harvard University, President of the Victorian Club, presided. Capt. Mahan was the principal speaker of the evening. His address was an analysis of Nelson's life, character, and achievements.

Commander Takeshita compared Nelson's equipment with the naval equipment of present times. In this connection he referred to the use of wireless telegraphy, and said that Admiral Togo, through wireless messages from his scout ships, was able to know every move of Rojestvensky several days before the battle of the sea of Japan.

CELEBRATE NELSON DAY.

Sons of St. George Dine in Memory of Trafalgar.

To celebrate the centennial of Lord Nelson's victory at Trafalgar, and also the twenty-fourth anniversary of their lodge, members of the Sons of St. George, Nelson Lodge No. 64, had a dinner at the Vendome last night. The speakers were the Rev. Dr. Sydney Herbert Cox, Sir Percy Sanderson, British Consul General at New York; the Rev. Francis J. Clay Morgan, and J. B. Grote Higgins.

HUNGARIAN TREASON ARREST.

Ex-Premier Banffy's Secretary Accused—A Legislator Murdered.

BUDAPEST, Oct. 21.—Nemed Denes, private secretary of Baron Banffy, the ex-Premier, was arrested this afternoon on the charge of high treason.

The arrest of Denes arises from his connection with the publication a month ago of the pamphlet entitled "The Hungarian Crisis and the Hohenzollerns," in which the overthrow of the Hapsburgs and the establishment of a Hohenzollern dynasty in Hungary was represented as the only way to the prosperity of Hungary. Baron Banffy has been openly charged with sanctioning the publication of the pamphlet, but has denied any connection with it.

It is said that the police seized a letter in Baron Banffy's handwriting in the rooms of the author of the pamphlet.

Milan Miloszavljeviks, a Liberal member of the lower house of the Hungarian Parliament, was murdered in a street at Szahadka this afternoon by a man named Virichs, who was arrested. The prisoner says the fight between Miloszavljeviks and himself was the result of a private quarrel.

ETIQUETTE AND CORSETS.

Prussian Government Rulings on Disputed Questions.

BERLIN, Oct. 21.—Among the official decisions published to-day is one of the Prussian Railway Administration on a point of etiquette advanced by a station master on the Lower Rhine. He asked for a ruling as to whether the young women subordinates in his office should not recognize him first on the street instead of waiting to be saluted according to the prevailing custom. The Government directed the station master to salute first.

The Principal of the Girls' High School at Saarbrücken inquired of the Provincial Government if she was authorized to forbid the young women to wear corsets during gymnastic exercises. The Government authorized their rigid prohibition.

No English Secretary for Reid.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—The report to the effect that Ambassador Reid had appointed an Englishman as his private secretary is unfounded. Delancey Jay, who was appointed in America and who accompanied the Ambassador to London, has been regularly on duty ever since. Mr. Reid has not appointed an Englishman to any position in connection with the Embassy.

DECLARES RAW MILK WORSE THAN A PLAGUE

Nathan Straus Says the Cities Should Pasteurize It.

STATES OUGHT TO PASS LAWS

Enormous Number of Lives Might Be Saved—Paper Read Before International Congress in Paris.

PARIS, Oct. 21.—The International Congress dealing with the philanthropic distribution of milk, which was opened yesterday at the Pasteur Institute here, closed its sessions to-day. There was a large and representative attendance of delegates from many countries.

Dr. A. P. Greene, director of the Straus milk depots in New York, read a paper written by Nathan Straus explaining the methods of the Straus system of distribution. In the course of the paper Mr. Straus said:

"Millions of dollars annually are spent to counteract the evils of popular ignorance. Why not treat physical ailments in the same manner? Prevent them. Prevent helpless infants developing from puny, sickly childhood into diseased, weakened, and helpless manhood and womanhood. The enormous sums paid annually to hospitals and like institutions should, as far as possible, be saved. And a great deal is possible.

"It is milk—raw milk, diseased milk—which is responsible for the largest percentage of sickness in the world. Milk is the one article of food in which disease and death may lurk without giving any suspicion from its taste, smell, or appearance. Why, then, use in its raw form? Why ever trust it without due precaution? I hold that the only safe rule is—Pasteurize the entire milk suply and make it a function of the municipality.

"The evils of impure milk, which, according to the United States Department of Agriculture, are the leading cause of a mortality of 33 per cent. of children before 3 years old, and of many adults, are threefold. First—It is generally known that it causes diarrhoeal disturbances, which, especially during the hot months, are the most fruitful source of infant death. Second—A number of the most violent infectious diseases to which the human race is subject are communicated by milk. For milk may, and frequently has, become the carrier of disease not found in cattle, but occurring on the farm or dairy, in the person of human beings. Thus Prof. Kober traced 148 epidemics of typhoid to the dairy, and an incredible number of epidemics of scarlet fever and of diphtheria have been traced beyond the chance of doubt to the same source. Third—Contamination occurs through diseases of the cattle themselves, the most prevalent being tuberculosis. The extent to which tuberculosis exists in cows is shown by the following:

"Prof. Bang of Copenhagen says that in Denmark over 60 per cent. of the animals are tuberculous in all herds of over fifty head. Macfadyen estimates that 30 per cent. of all the cattle in England are tuberculous, and in tests made in various parts of the United States it was found that from 2 to 50 per cent. of the cattle gave evidence of the disease. So appalling is this evidence that Prof. von Behring asserted categorically in 1903 that 'the milk fed to infants is the chief cause of consumption.'

"Let us stop and consider—that if the assertion of Behring reveals the truth, of which, though not a physician, I have long been convinced, its practical importance is appalling; at least 50 per cent. of all the children who die have been infected with tuberculosis through their food and one-seventh of all deaths are due to tuberculosis."

Mr. Straus proceeded to give formulae for the Pasteurization of milk, and to describe the methods of distribution adopted by him in New York and the excellent effects which followed his efforts to supply the poor in that city with Pasteurized milk. In conclusion he said:

"I contemplate with dismay the time when any organization which I am able to provide will be inadequate to supply the demand—a demand constantly increasing as the people are becoming impressed with the saving of child life thus effected. I can only trust that before that time arrives the State itself may be prepared to enforce the obligation of making a supply of wholesome milk food for infants a municipal function, and so stamping out the seeds of a plague more destructive than any that is to be dreaded under conditions of our modern civilization. For no plague could yield so plentiful a crop of deaths as that which is reaped annually from the seed of contagion deposited in the human system by millions of noxious bacteria developed in milk."

Dutch Kill Fifty Sumatrans.

ROUVIER CABINET IN PERIL.

It Is Felt That It Has Not Been Firm Enough with Germany.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 21.—An outcome of the recent press controversy on the relations between Germany and France has been a widespread feeling of discontent in parliamentary circles with the present Government.

On many sides I hear the opinion expressed that if M. Delcassé went too far in his policy of provocation against Germany M. Rouvier, on the other hand, has not made it sufficiently clear that France seeks no rapprochement with Germany, and, in fact, is opposed to a binding alliance with any European Power except Russia.

It is generally believed that when the Chamber meets M. Rouvier will be called on for explanations of his foreign policy, which may easily result in a Ministerial crisis.

PARIS, Oct. 21.—M. Delcassé to-day made his first public appearance since his resignation, presiding at the Franco-Spanish Congress called to encourage the construction of a trans-Pyrenees Railway to link Spain and France.

The ex-Foreign Minister received an enthusiastic welcome, but made no allusion to the recent bitter controversy over the reversal of his pro-British and anti-German policy.

The congress adopted M. Delcassé's resolution applauding the Pyrenees line as a practical means of strengthening the bonds between the two countries.

MADRID EN FETE FOR LOUBET.

President Starts for Spain To-day—Rouvier to Accompany Him.

PARIS, Oct. 21.—President Loubet will start for Madrid to-morrow on the Presidential train.

He will visit the Escurial (twenty-seven miles from Madrid) and place a wreath on the tomb of King Alfonso XII., reaching Madrid on Monday afternoon.

MADRID, Oct. 21.—This city is superbly decorated in honor of the approaching arrival of President Loubet to return King Alfonso's visit to France.

The meeting of the two rulers will be the occasion for a notable national demonstration and a series of brilliant spectacles. Business will practically be suspended for a week. All classes, including Radicals, Republicans, and Socialists, are uniting to welcome the President.

Considerable political significance is attached to the visit. Premier Rouvier will accompany M. Loubet.

The houses here are covered with bunting. The public edifices are decorated with the entwined flags of France and Spain, and at night they will be brilliantly illuminated. Sumptuously appointed apartments in the Royal Palace are ready for M. Loubet's occupation. The city is crowded with visitors.

Clementel Weds an Englishwoman.

PARIS, Oct. 21.—M. Clémentel, Minister of the Colonies, was married this afternoon to Mrs. Rigby Knowles, widow of an English publicist. The cersmony was performed at the Town Hall of Neuilly. Premier Rouvier acted as chief witness for the groom and Admiral Fournier for the bride. A brilliant assemblage of Cabinet Ministers, army and navy officers, and members of the Diplomatic Corps witnessed the ceremony.

QUICKER ROUTE TO EGYPT.

North German Lloyd Steamers Going to Alexandria.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 21.—As the result of a contract which has just been concluded between the Roumanian Government and the North German Lloyd Company with respect to the extension of the Constanza, Constantinople, and Smyrna line to Alexandria, the journey between Berlin and the Egyptian Coast has been reduced to four days and a half, and at the same time the postal service between Germany and Africa and Australia via Port Said has been proportionately accelerated.

This new arrangement is regarded as likely to hurt the business of the Austrian Lloyd Company.

BANDITS NOW WANT MORE.

Leader Makes Fresh Demands, and Britons Are Still Captives.

TANGIER, Oct. 21.—The negotiations for the liberation of the British officers, Capt. Crowther and Lieut. Hatton, who are held by Moroccan tribesmen, have been broken off.

The scout ship Pathfinder, which sailed last night in order to exchange Vallente, the bandit, for the two officers, has returned here from Tetuan. The bandit is still on the Pathfinder.

It is stated that on the arrival of the Pathfinder at Tetuan Vallente's brother made fresh demands which the officer in command of the vessel was unable to concede without authority. The nature of the demanda has not been made known by the authorities here.

ENDS MOORS' INDEPENDENCE.

Departure of Ministers Means Foreign Control of Morocco.

PARIS, Oct. 21.—Information has been received here that Count von Tattenbach-Ashold, the German Minister at Fez, and M. St. René Taillandier, the French Minister at the same capital, are about to depart together from Fez.

This marks the practical termination of the Sultan's direct control of Moroccan affairs and the beginning of the Powers' assumption of authority by means of the international conference. The Franco-German accord stipulated that both Ministers should withdraw, but their actual departure closes the Sultan's opportunities for further communicating directly with the Governments through the Ministers.

The result is not calculated to fulfill Morocco's hopes, which were raised to a high pitch by Emperor William's visit to Tangier and the assurances of German protection. Reports from Fez show that the Sultan has now recognized that the international conference subjects Morocco practically to the same foreign control as the French programme. Therefore he is deeply disappointed to see the Ministers depart and Morocco's future pass out of his hands.

Hayashi May Succeed Komura.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—In the event of a change in the Cabinet at Tokio Baron Hayashi is likely to be called home to take charge of the Foreign Office. The Baron is the senior member of the Japanese Diplomatic Corps, and the Emperor, it is understood, will be glad to utilize his experience should Baron Komura retire from the Foreign Office.

FOOD.

SOLDIERS "SALT HOSS"

Often Leaves Him as Bad as Wounded.

Army food has ruined the digestion of many good men. A veteran speaking of how a wise selection of food helped him, says:

"For over 35 years my stomach gave me an immense amount of trouble. Everything I put into it seemed to cause an internal (and infernal) revolution which unfitted me more or less for business. My doctors told me that the trouble was all brought about by the salt pork or salt beef (or horse) which comprised the main part of the food supplied me by Uncle Sam during my three years service in the great Civil War.

"For many years I tried cracked wheat, oatmeal, boiled rice, and many other things, but my stomach kept up its unpleasant grumblings and painful aches.

"A little over a year ago while in Detroit on business, a friend sitting at the breakfast table with me, ordered as a starter, a dish of Grape-Nuts. 'Make it two,' said I. It was my first experience with Grape-Nuts food and I was delighted to find not only that it was most palatable, but that I had much less of the internal commotion than usually followed my morning meal. Since then I have eaten Grape-Nuts every morning for breakfast and frequently for luncheon also.

"My stomach has been toned up and is stronger than it has been since 1862. I have no more of the old pains and uneasiness and I am better able to attend to my business. This result I attribute to the use of Grape-Nuts, as I have taken no medicines meantime." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

ONLY WOMEN IN CABS SAFE FROM DOOLEY'S MEN

Magistrate Mayo's Comment in Freeing Curfew Prisoners.

ATTEMPT TO CLOSE BROWNE'S

McAdoo Sure Things Have Been Misrepresented—"Rubbish! Rubbish!" Cries the Czar from Coney.

"It seems to have come to this," said Magistrate Mayo in Jefferson Market Court yesterday, "that no women will be able to go through the Tenderloin at night except in a cab."

This was when the twenty-fifth of thirty women was arraigned as a vagrant by Capt. Dooley's policemen. In the twenty-four cases already heard all but two women had been discharged. The evidence against these was enough to warrant their being fined $10 each.

Thirteen women were arrested by Policeman Carl Neilson. The evidence in each case was that the woman had been "walking up and down." Neilson declared that he knew the women to be disorderly persons, and said he was acting under instructions from Capt. Dooley to arrest all women, known as disorderly persons, who appeared in the Tenderloin after dark without escorts. In discharging the thirteen women, Magistrate Mayo said:

"You men have no right to arrest a woman simply because she looks to you other than respectable. The question of a woman's respectability should not be left merely to the impression of a policeman."

The rest of the thirty were arraigned by Policemen O'Flaherty, McDonough, Bresnan, and others. They also were discharged, except one, who was fined $10. The woman who was arrested while walking with an escort on Friday night and who gave her name as Maggie Ramsey and an address in Eighty-fifth Street, was among those discharged.

A reporter sought Capt. Dooley yesterday afternoon to ask him if he still intended to continue the crusade.

"I am arresting women now as I have arrested them for twenty-one years, and as I will continue to arrest them," said the Captain.

"On what charge?"

"Go and read the statutes."

"Have you the right to arrest a woman, no matter what her character is, lock her up in the station all night without food, unless she calls a messenger to get it for her, when it is certain that the court will not sustain the charge?"

"Rubbish! Rubbish!" shouted the Captain, suddenly losing patience. "You're talking rot—rot!"

Since Capt. Dooley took charge of the Tenderloin his men have been in open revolt against his methods, but a few are carrying out his orders about arresting women.

Police Commissioner McAdoo professed to be doubtful yesterday of the truth of the stories about the Dooley methods. He said:

"Capt. Dooley tells me that he never issued any such order as that spoken of in the newspapers. I am quite sure he would not have done so without consulting me or the Inspector. I am opposed to all such spectacular and sensational methods of enforcing the law, and will be the first to condemn the infringement of the personal liberty of any woman walking in the street, provided she is there for a lawful purpose. The public may take it from me that there is nothing whatever in the sensational statements."

In the Tenderloin last night, the crop of richly dressed and jeweled "vagrants" consisted only of three or four women. It was noted, however, that police activity has taken still another direction. A policeman went into Browne's chophouse, in Broadway, early yesterday morning, a little after 1 o'clock.

"You must close this place up," he said.

"Why?" asked the head waiter.

"You have a bar back there."

"It was closed at 1 o'clock. Only the restaurant is running now."

"Well, I don't keep it. You've got to close up anyhow. That's orders. Everything's got to close."

The Haymarket dance hall is open from 8:15 P. M. to 2 A. M. on week-day nights.

GRANT EXTOLS THE Y. M. C. A.

Declares the Governors Island Branch Has Aided Discipline.

The wives and daughters of the officers of the Eighth Infantry, the garrisoning regiment on Governors Island, were the hostesses yesterday afternoon at a reception given for the friends of the army branch of the Young Men's Christian Association on Governors Island. The reception was held in the Young Men's Christian Association building on the island, and was attended by several hundred of those interested in the work from the city. Col. F. A. Smith of the Eighth Infantry presided, and Gen. Fred D. Grant made a speech, in which he lauded the work of the association as an army adjunct.

"In behalf of the Department of the East," said Gen. Grant, "I wish to thank all of you for being here to-day, and at the same time I wish to say that the soldiers of the Eighth Infantry on Governors Island are among the best I have ever seen. When the Young Men's Christian Association first expressed a desire to start a branch at this post I had my doubts, as I thought that perhaps it might interfere with discipline; the reverse has been the case. It is the duty of the commander of a department to weed out the bad and develop the good, and the Young Men's Christian Association has helped in this regard."

Some of those at the reception were Miss Helen Gould, Mrs. F. A. Smith, Mrs. E. S. Walker, Mrs. E. M. Johnson, Mrs. A. N. Chambers, and Mrs. J. K. Miller. The reception yesterday is probably the last that will be given by the army branch of the Young Men's Christian Association during the time that the Eighth Infantry is on duty there. The Eighth is to sail for the Philippines early in January.

QUERIES TO ILLINOIS LIFE.

Attorney General of Illinois Wants Details of Transactions.

Special to The New-York Times

CHICAGO, Oct. 21.—Attorney General Stead, acting at the request of Gov. Deneen for the State Insurance Department, has demanded information from the officials of the Illinois Life Insurance Company regarding certain of its transactions. He has sent to the company a list of formal interrogatories and a demand is made for receipts and vouchers to explain some expenditures shown in the company's accounts.

With regard to one sixty-five-thousand-dollar item, expended at the time when the Kansas Legislature was passing an act enabling the transfer of the policies of the Kansas Mutual to the Illinois Life, information is wanted.

Though President James W. Stevens of the Illinois Life denied to-night that such questions had been asked of the company, it is learned that the State officials expect to receive answers by Wednesday, or at least that the answers are promised by that time.

The State officials have been waiting impatiently for six weeks for the replies. At first, it is said, the disposition of the company was to ignore the request of the Attorney General, but at Springfield to-day it was said that assurance had been given that the answers would be forthcoming next week.

PLAYERS HONOR JOHN DREW.

Elect Him Their President—Proudest Moment of My Life, Says He.

The Players' Club gave a reception last night in honor of John Drew's election to the Presidency of the club. The office has been held both by Joseph Jefferson and Edwin Booth. Mr. Drew rose before his fellow-actors and said:

"Gentlemen, this is the proudest moment of my life. This honor, which has come to me unsolicited, is all the more valuable. The Presidency of this representative club I regard as high an honor as can be accorded an actor."

The Players were present in force to do Mr. Drew honor. He was escorted from the Empire Theatre at the close of his performance there by Brander Matthews, Lionel Frohman, and the young Thomas Jefferson. There was much festivity when Mr. Drew arrived, and he was heartily congratulated by more than a hundred of his fellow-actors.

Three Killed in Train Wreck.

KNOXVILLE, Oct. 21.—A wreck on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad at Duff, Tenn., six miles north of La Follette, Tenn., to-day resulted in the death of Fireman Walker of La Follette, Brakeman Colwell, and George Gordan, civil engineer and a son of Circuit Judge Gordan of Louisville, Ky. The wrecked train was a work train, consisting of an engine and several light cars. The engine is said to have been topheavy, and when a sharp curve was reached it turned over on its side.

Sends Magistrate to Prison.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 21.—Justice of the Peace Charles F. Knuth was sentenced by Judge Fiedler in the Police Court to-day to ten days in the Workhouse for refusing to bring his docket and records into court as ordered by Judge Fiedler. Proceedings were recently brought against Knuth and several other Justices on the charge of practicing extortion against persons charged with minor offenses.

A. J. WHITEMAN CONVICTED.

Noted Forger May Have to Face Four More Indictments.

BUFFALO, Oct. 21.—The jury in the case of Alonzo J. Whiteman of Dansville, N. Y., on trial on a charge of defrauding the Fidelity Trust Company of Buffalo by means of raised and forged drafts, brought in a verdict of guilty this morning. There are four more indictments against Whiteman, but Assistant District Attorney Ryan declined to say what would be done with them. Whiteman was acquitted on one indictment last March.

Whiteman has been one of the most troublesome criminals that the Protective Committee of the American Bankers' Association has had to deal with. He is a native of Dansville, N. Y., received his education in Hamilton College, where he had the reputation of being the best poker player in the institution. Subsequently he was graduated from the Columbia Law School, began the practice of law in Duluth, and was afterward elected a member of the Minnesota Legislature. He was at one time Mayor of Duluth, Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, and a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in 1888. He was believed to be worth $1,000,000. After losing this in speculation, he became an associate of professional forgers and swindlers. He has been arrested many times.

Many members of Whiteman's gang have been arrested by Pinkerton detectives, but it has been exceedingly difficult to bring about the conviction of Whiteman, as he has always protected himself by having three or four people between himself and the "layer down" of the forged paper at the bank.

Will Ignoring Second Husband Stands.

Judge John A. Blair, in the Orphans' Court, Jersey City, handed down a decision yesterday sustaining the will of Mrs. Elizebeth Sippert, who left $50,000 to be divided between her children by Charles Hoffman, her first husband, whose estate was left to her. The will was made while she was still Mrs. Hoffman, and John Sippert, her second husband, contended that her second marriage invalidated it.

Elevated Not Liable for Its Crush.

A jury in the Supreme Court case of Miss Ida Clarke against the Manhattan Railway Company yesterday found for the defendant, holding that the company was not liable for the negligence of a crowd of passengers. Miss Clarke, a stenographer, sued for $15,000 on account of injuries suffered on Dec. 17, 1902, when she was pushed off the platform of the 116th Street elevated station. Ex-Assistant District Attorney McIntyre conducted the defense.

West Twenty-third Street

SPEND NEARLY $30,000 A YEAR EACH ON AUTOS

J. J. Astor Has 20 Cars and C. K. G. Billings 13.

THE COST TO A POOR MAN

For a Small Runabout $600 or More, and for a Tonneau Car $3,300 a Year.

"Why is it so many second-hand machines are on the market?" asked a young automobilist.

"Simple enough," was the reply. "It's because a lot of people have enough money to buy better and faster machines, while others have discovered that they haven't sufficient money to own one. The reasonable price of good machines, particularly of the little two-passenger runabouts that you can buy for from $600 to $750, has led many young fellows with comfortable incomes to join the ranks of automobile owners.

"But the cost of a motor car doesn't really begin until you get it. When a man buys a horse he usually figures on the expense of keeping the animal at a livery stable or at his suburban home. With the automobile, however, hundreds of purchasers go it blind and learn by experience that an automobile has as voracious an appetite as any horse. A simple runabout that is kept busy the greater part of the year will cost about as much as a man pays for his six or seven room flat."

Autos Cost Billings $30,000 a Year.

What a man can pay for the use and maintenance of an automobile is regulated entirely by his own resources. C. K. G. Billings, for instance, who disposed of all his fast horses last week except Lou Dillon, Major Delmar, and Hontas Crook, and is now devoting his attention and money to automobiles, pays nearly $30,000 a year for his private garage and to keep his thirteen cars in good running condition. Col. John Jacob Astor probably pays as much, if not more, for the care of his twenty machines in his private garage on his Rhinebeck estate. The man who keeps a number of automobiles is by no means a rarity. In fact, a stable of automobiles is coming to be recognized as the proper thing for the man of wealth, just as his private yacht, his box at the Opera, and his town and country houses.

But all men do not possess a superabundance of money, and yet most of them would like to own automobiles. How cheaply, then, can a machine be kept? The cheapest car that a man can buy is of course one of the little open runabouts. He can easily run from forty to 50 miles with it in an afternoon, while its mechanical construction is so simple that his wife can learn to manage it. A car of this sort costs from $650 to $1,000, the maximum price including a canopy top and better upholstering.

"If the owner lives in an apartment he must arrange to have the car stored for him. In the automobile district of the city, from about Thirty-eighth to Sixty-fifth Street, adjoining Broadway, he will find several garages that will store his car, keep it washed, polished, and in good condition for $15 a month. His gasoline bill will be in proportion to the distance he travels.

Assuming that the owner will use his car mainly on Saturdays and Sundays, with perhaps a few hours on the other days, he will consume from fifteen to twenty gallons of gasoline a week. With his runabout equipped with a single cylinder, four gallons of gasoline ought to carry him 100 miles and one gallon of lubricating oil will last him 400 miles. The best lubricating oil costs $1 a gallon. A gallon of oil will be needed every week, while for 400 miles, sixteen gallons of gasoline will be required. Purchasing this at retail, the cost will be 20 cents a gallon. This means a weekly outlay of $3.20. With $1 for oil, his weekly cost for fuel alone is $1.20, or about $17 a month. This, added to his storage charge, will bring his monthly bill up to $32.

But the expense does not end here. There will be repairs. How much will depend entirely upon the owner's care in driving, and his knowledge of his car's mechanical construction. Then, too, good luck must be reckoned with to some extent.

$37 a Month a Low Estimate.

Notwithstanding the utmost care, a tire may suddenly go to pieces, and if one has to pay from $30 to $40 for a new tire very often it will make a big difference in his automobile bill. At the lowest possible estimate tire troubles and general repairs will cost $5 a month. This will make the bill $37 a month, which is a very reasonable estimate.

"If the owner of a runabout gets through the year on that average he will be one of the fortunate ones," said the manager of a garage. "His actual expense is likely to be nearer $50 a month."

The next step in automobile development is the ownership of a tonneau body touring car of from twenty-five to forty horse power and with two or four cylinder motors. This car will require more fuel and more attention, while its greater weight and more complicated machinery will increase the breakdowns and tire troubles. The garage will charge $25 a month to store this car. This includes washing and polishing, everything, in fact, except actual repairs. The charge for repairs made in the garage is 75 cents an hour, and there are few repairs that can be made that will cost less than $5. At a conservative basis, the monthly repair bill will be $30. More than twice the quantity of gasoline and oil that is necessary for the small one-cylinder car will be needed. About forty gallons of gasoline a week will not be excessive when the car is used nearly every day in pleasant weather, and about two gallons of oil. This will mean $10 a week for fuel, or $40 a month.

While the owner of a car of this size will probably drive it himself, he will also require a chauffeur. The chauffeur is needed, not so much to drive the car, for any one can learn to do that in a short time, but to keep it in good order and know what to do if anything happens while on the road. Every chauffeur should be a capable mechanician, and what he will save an owner in preventing breakdowns may often amount to more than his month's salary.

Hire a Good Chauffeur.

"Get a good chauffeur or none at all," is the advice of a veteran in garage management. "The good man is worth his price, while the cheap man is worth nothing. To give you an example: A customer of mine employed a man for $12 a week to run his car, and started on a tour through New England. The next day I got a telephone call from him near Stamford asking me to send up a car and tow him home. I sent a car, and when we began to look for the trouble, what do you think we found? A little soft mud had gone through the radiator and clogged up some of the pipes. One of the workmen got it out with a hairpin in fifteen minutes. We couldn't tell the owner that, so we had to keep the machine all night and send him a bill for $5. We also coached the chauffeur and perhaps he will know better next time. However, it cost the owner $75 to be towed to the city, plus $5 for repairs, and besides the loss of time and extra hotel bills."

A good chauffeur gets $25 a week, but a capable man who has had experience with several makes of machines finds no difficulty in finding a place paying from $125 to $150 a month. The demand for first-class chauffeurs is greater than the supply. One of the schools in this city that instructs new men and does not give a chauffeur a certificate until he has passed a rigid examination has a place waiting for every man who finishes the course.

The chauffeur also receives his board and clothes. His overalls and his leather suit, cap, goggles, and gloves must be supplied. Where no arrangements are made to board and lodge the chauffeur at the owner's home, it is customary to allow him $10 a week, and he finds his own lodgings.

Storage	$25
Gasoline and oil	40
Repairs of all kinds	30
Chauffeur	125
Board, lodging, and clothing of chauffeur	55
Total	$275

This is $3,300 a year, and many owners who are not rated as men of wealth pay a great deal more. By far the largest item for repairs will be for tires. The larger and heavier the car the more severe will be the wear and tear upon the tires. Here again the most expensive is the best. For the big touring cars the best tires, including the inner tube, will cost from $50 to $60 each, while for the same size of imported tires, that the owners of the best foreign cars use, the price will be $105. It is therefore to the interest of every owner to get along with as few tires as possible.

Besides the tires there are a number of things about the car that will need constant repairing. A good chain which costs about $20 will usually last a year. New spark plugs will be needed frequently. They cost $3 apiece. A new igniter costs $15. The clutch leathers and clutch bars must be renewed every three or four months. To do this it is necessary to take the clutch out, and on some cars the entire transmission has to be removed. This will take the better part of two days, so that added to the cost of $4 or $5 for a new clutch leather, the owner will have a bill of $15 for twenty hours work.

C. K. G. Billings undoubtedly pays more than any other automobile owner in this city for the care and running of his automobiles. But the bills of Harry Payne Whitney, Judge Gary, Charles M. Schwab, Temple Bowdoin, I. E. Emerson, and many others are by no means small.

Has Thirteen Cars.

Mr. Billings has thirteen cars, and their estimated cost is $100,000. All but two are of foreign make. The American cars are a Woods electric runabout and a home-made electric car built by his head chauffeur for the use of Mr. Billings's son. It is one of the most compact little cars ever built outside of a regular factory, and can reel off fifteen miles an hour with ease. For touring purposes Mr. Billings has the choice of two richly upholstered cars, one a twenty-five horse power C. G. V. and the other a forty horse power machine of the same make. This car cost $11,000, but his thirty-five horse power Panhard with limousine body cost $15,000, and is one of the finest automobiles in the city. It will accommodate seven passengers. He also has a sixteen horse power Panhard with limousine body and a forty horse power Mercedes of the same style. In landaulet bodies there are five cars, two being C. G. V. machines of eighteen and twenty-five horse power each, a fourteen horse power Renault, a 20-30 Renault, and a Gallia electric. In addition, there is an eighteen horse power Mors open touring car and a French electric brougham, for use in wet weather and in the evening.

Mr. Billings has two stables in East Seventy-fifth Street, for which he pays $150 a month each. He has his own workshop and the electric plant for charging the electric cars. The cost of his shop and electric plant is about $1,000 a month. His monthly bill for lighting will amount to $50. Mr. Billings pays his head chauffeur $225 a month, and he has three other chauffeurs who receive $150 each. He has two washers at $50 a month, one being on duty in the day and the other at night.

His tire repair bill is probably close to $400 a month. As he buys his gasoline by the barrel, he gets it at the wholesale rate of 12 cents a gallon. He will probably use close to ten barrels a month, and three barrels of lubricating oil, which at barrel rates will cost about 40 cents a gallon. His monthly bill for new parts will be about $100. His chauffeurs live in the garage, and his bill for cleaning, living expenses, and clothing will perhaps be $200 a month. At this estimate Mr. Billings will pay for the care of his thirteen automobiles close to $2,000 a month. At 3½ per cent., the interest on $100,000, the estimated cost of the cars, will be $3,500, making an annual outlay of $27,500.

Some Other Owners.

Harry Payne Whitney has four cars, which he keeps at a garage near Broadway. He gives his cars plenty of use, and his monthly expense, exclusive of chauffeurs, is about $800. He has three chauffeurs, the head man getting $200 a month and the others $150. One of Mr. Whitney's cars is a theatre coach. All of his cars are foreign vehicles, one being a German Mercedes and the others French machines.

Judge Gary, the steel man, has three automobiles, which are stored with the Whitney cars. One is a 60-horse-power Mercedes, which cost $15,000. The second is a 20-horse-power Mercedes, with landaulet body, and the third is a Columbia electric brougham for city and night use. He has two chauffeurs, who receive $175 and $125 respectively. His monthly bills for storage, repairs, and new parts is about $400.

Temple Bowdoin of the J. Pierpont Morgan banking house has four foreign cars and two chauffeurs. I. E. Emerson owns five cars, a 40-horse-power Bollee with canopy top, a 15-horse-power Mors, a 20-horse-power Clement hansom, a 24-horse-power Mors, with limousine body, and a 20-horse-power Mercedes. Mr. Emerson employs a single chauffeur, who receives $225 a month. His bill is not so large as where several cars are kept in frequent use. About $300 a month will pay his repairs and storage bills.

SAYS WIFE IS INDEPENDENT.

Sergt. Tabor Declares Mrs. Tabor Doesn't Need His Support.

Mrs. Margaret S. Tabor, who has a millinery store in West 125th Street, has begun an action, through her attorney, John J. O'Connell, in the Supreme Court against her husband, Police Sergeant Harry J. R. Tabor, to recover $893 for support. The action is brought in the name of Mrs. Tabor's pastor, the Rev. Father Thomas Lynch, who brought about a settlement between the couple by which the Sergeant agreed to contribute toward the support of Mrs. Tabor.

The Tabors were married in June, 1887, and separated in November, 1900. In January, 1902, Tabor agreed to contribute $40 a month toward the support of his wife. He paid this for a while, but finally stopped the payments, alleging that his wife was able to support herself.

In his answer to the suit Sergt. Tabor declares that his wife has accumulated $50,000 in the millinery business, and is well able to support herself. He adds that she is making from $5,000 to $10,000 a year in real estate investments.

TOOK THE REVOLVER, TOO.

Appraiser Comley Didn't Wake Up Quickly Enough, and Lost Jewelry.

"Wake up, William," cried Mrs. William F. Comley, to her husband, who is Assistant Appraiser in charge of the Second Division of the Public Stores. Mr. Comley demurred.

"There are burglars in the house," continued Mrs. Comley.

Then Mr. Comley did wake up. He reached for his revolver, which he keeps in a case at the head of his bed. The revolver was gone. Mr. Comley got up. He found that the burglars had not only taken the revolver, but $600 worth of jewelry as well.

This happened at Lincoln Park, N. J., early yesterday morning. The victim was telling his friends about it yesterday.

MR. ASTOR'S TAX OBJECTION.

The Netherland and Astor Building Excessively Assessed, He Contends.

William Waldorf Astor obtained from Justice McCall in the Supreme Court yesterday writs of certiorari to have reviewed the action of the city tax officials, contending that they have assessed certain of his real estate at more than their value. One piece of property, the Astor Building, at 8 to 12 Wall Street, which runs through the block to Pine Street, Mr. Astor asserts has been assessed at $2,100,000, when the assessment should only be $1,202,400.

The Hotel Netherland, at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street, Mr. Astor declares has been assessed at $2,450,000, when the assessment should be $1,837,500.

DELUSIONS ABOUT GAS.

The old fogy property owners and taxpayers of New York can't keep up with municipal ownership Socialism. It would kill them in a week. Here, for instance, is Mr. IVINS. He is brimful of ideas, and in the course of an hour's speech at Carnegie Hall Friday night gave his audience enough to think about for one full year. For the most part they were sound, tried, and acceptable ideas, too. All his professions and promises were fine and virtuous, and it was only when he took up the topic of the public service corporations that he passed out of the realm of the real and the intelligible into the land where spooks and visions and strange new things whiz through the dim air with a velocity that takes away the calm man's breath and makes him dizzy. Mr. IVINS promised that if elected Mayor he would "leave nothing undone to place the city at the earliest practicable moment in the position of operating these plants [the gas plants] as it does its water plant, thereby giving to the people an honest service at lower prices and of better quality."

"Thereby"? On that "thereby" posterity will hang all the prophets of municipal trading if it shall prove that they have given misleading counsel. How can it be that a gas plant operated by the city will give the people "an honest service at lower prices and of better quality"? Will the municipal plant use any better coal or a higher grade of water in making its gas? Probably the same. Will the city hire more efficient laborers and workmen at lower wages? It is a favorite device of municipal ownership agitators to hold out to wage earners the hope of higher pay under city operation. Will the municipality employ a more competent staff of chemists, technical men, and experts? Undoubtedly the Consolidated Company hires the best it can find. Finally, will the administration of the gas business be in better hands after it has passed under the control of the city? Will the Commissioners of Water Supply, Gas, and Electricity appointed by future Mayors be men of bigger brains and larger business experience than the officers and managers intrusted by the private gas companies with the administration of their affairs?

Mr. IVINS himself answers that question. He says of the administration of Mayor MCCLELLAN: "I unhesitatingly denounce the administration as a sham, a poor, ugly, beggarly humbug, a desert of the dust of broken promises and hope betrayed." Mr. IVINS knows, everybody knows, that a majority of our future Mayors will be Tammany Mayors; that a good deal more than half of the time the city will be under Tammany rule. If Mr. IVINS should through some volcanic eruption of civic virtue be elected Mayor and empowered to buy the gas works, he would have barely time to acquire the plants and transfer the management thereof to his Commissioner within his four years' term. Then in all probability we should have another Tammany Mayor and some Oakley or Pallas would be put in charge.

When we bring Mr. IVINS down to earth again and take a good square look at his "thereby," we see that it bears a very different meaning from that accepted by his Carnegie Hall audience when he spoke it so trippingly Friday night. All the oracles of municipal ownership promise a better and cheaper service. With delusions and impossible promises they fool those who listen to them. Can the service be better if it be rendered by "poor, ugly, beggarly humbugs" working in "a desert of the dust of broken promises"? By a liberal omission of legitimate factors of cost the service can be made to look cheaper on the books. The experience of English cities is quoted. But municipal debts in Great Britain have in recent years increased several hundred per cent., while the population was increasing 30 per cent. The taxpayer's money has been invested in gas plants. One consequence has been that with the public funds tied up in gas works the installation of electrical lighting plants has been continually put off or not accomplished until years after cities in the dark ages of private ownership have been in the enjoyment of the new illuminant. Mr. IVINS himself says that gas will largely be superseded for lighting purposes by electricity. Then why pay thirty millions—which is less than one-fifth their present market price—for gas works soon to become obsolete?

THE ARMY CANTEEN.

It is evident that a determined effort is to be made at the coming session of Congress to restore the canteen at the army posts. That is hardly the proper way to put it. The real effort is to administer the army according to the opinion of its own officers as to the best methods of promoting its discipline and efficiency, efficiency of course including, and especially including, temperance. This opinion is overwhelmingly in favor of re-establishing the canteen. Every department commander, we believe, who has expressed himself upon the subject at all, has expressed himself in favor of the restoration. The great majority of post commanders, and of officers in general in command of troops and responsible for their behavior, are of the same opinion. That ought to be decisive. It will be decisive if Congress is governed by what Congress knows to be the facts of the case, and if Congress turns a deaf ear to the appeals made to it by people who have no responsibility in the premises, and no right to an opinion about the matter.

The canteen has been abolished now for some six years. The "experiment" of governing the army by the opinion of outsiders has had a fair trial. Everybody who knows anything about the matter knows that there is no evasion of orders in the army. There is no "side door." The prohibition has been absolutely and honestly enforced; and it has been found to work mischief, and in particular to promote instead of diminishing drunkenness. The latest testimony is that of the medical staff of the army as to the increase of cases of alcoholism under the system of prohibition. The "curve of drunkenness" derived from the statistics would be accepted as conclusive evidence by everybody whose accessibility to evidence had not been renounced or impaired. And it is well known that there is another class of diseases, not so easily discussable, the increase of which has equally followed the decision that a soldier must go outside of his quarters to get a glass of beer.

The "We See To You" Society, which undertakes to regulate what may be called the domestic affairs of the army, without reference to the opinions of those who know what they are talking about, seems to take the ground that an enlisted man is a convict, that he has, by enlisting, forfeited all the personal liberties of a citizen-at-large, and that they are therefore entitled to take control of him and to regulate his personal habits. There is no warrant of law or reason for this pretension. The enlisted man is a volunteer, who will cease to enlist, and much more to re-enlist, if he knows that the pretension of meddlesome fanatics outside of the army to control it will be preferred by Congress to the regulation of it by its own officers, who are of course, and by the nature of the case, the best judges of what will most promote its efficiency. Happily, the associations of women are no longer all on one side. Opposed to the women of the W. C. T. U., who know nothing of what they are talking about, there is now a Woman's Army and Navy League, which does know something about it, and which may be expected to be heard before the committees of Congress at this coming session. It is rather insulting to the intelligence and the independence of Congress, and rather humiliating to the country, that the organization of such a body of women should have been rendered necessary. But we have to take things as we find them; and the formation of the Woman's Army and Navy League promises to contribute a new and influential factor to the coming discussion of the question.

FIGHT AGAINST ART DUTIES.

A number of artists have determined to find out whether the tax on importations of objects of the fine arts, which was placed in the tariff without consulting the painters, sculptors, and architects of the country, cannot be removed. From time to time protests have been made by groups of artists against the absurdity of various sections of the National tax on art, and generally against the position taken by the framers of the tariff, that objects of the fine arts should be treated like those of the industries and trades. Those framers considered that the tax on art made the tariff wall more complete and would prevent importations of non-artistic things under the cloak of artistic. Thus they professed to have discovered that modern pictures were brought in as old masters; and so, in tender consideration for American painters, decreed that antiques should be discouraged by a heavy fine in order that native artists should not suffer by competition.

At present a good many stand-patters will acknowledge the awkwardness of the situation and concede that the vast majority of native artists do not want protection and dislike the attempt to do them a favor against their will. But they fear to loosen one brick in the tariff wall lest the opening grow larger and larger, and certain favored industries, whose representatives gathered once in Washington and dictated terms to the legislators, should find themselves exposed to foreign competition before they know what is up. To faithful party men they dispense the venerable song that such minor injustices of the tariff must be borne for the sake of the grand old policy of the grand old party. To such critics they minimize the importance of the tax on art, while to reprobates outside the fence they talk about the need of every dollar from the customs, the beauty of a tax on luxuries, and the danger that the United States will be "flooded with bad art."

Among the art dealers a suggestion of compromise has been well received—and it has the adherence of some artists also—the point of which is directed against the last-mentioned argument—that flood of bad art which the distinguished connoisseurs and students of art among the stand-patters profess to fear. This is to charge an entrance fee of $100 for every painting that passes the customs. Poor stuff would not stand such a fine; good paintings would not be kept out by so small a percentage on their valuation.

As a matter of cold fact these arguments against the complete removal of duties on art are talk against time, for not one speaker in a thousand makes them seriously. They are good enough as parries for the attacks of artists and art lovers, persons who do not count for votes, but take up an unconscionable space in the papers. Despite the ill-concealed condescension with which our statesmen submit to discussions on such academic themes, there may be more in this movement than they surmise. Such a compromise as the above would be a mistake. It will be just as difficult to obtain that concession as to reach the only self-respecting and civilized position, which is, a return of art objects to the free list. All energies should be bent to that end.

It is well for the art organizations to rally in this cause, since the odium that attaches to the United States owing to our mediaeval conditions with regard to foreign and ancient art reacts on the artists. They are supposed to favor this futile protection out of consciousness of their own weakness. We know better; but others do not. May they find supporters in and out of Congress who are sensitive to the honor of the country!

MASSACHUSETTS AND NEWFOUNDLAND.

Humor and pathos are mingled in the fisheries squabble. If the Newfoundlanders and the Americans were allowed to trade together there would be nothing to write about. But both Governments forbid commerce in every respect otherwise lawful. None of us can buy or sell freely across an imaginary line because of Gloucester's veto. And the Newfoundlanders are forbidden to sell bait in order to put pressure upon Gloucester fishing vessels. On this side the border Senator LODGE is politically disciplined to the imminent risk of his Senatorial life, and on that side the border the bait sellers, impoverished and starving by the prohibition of their industry, are holding indignation meetings against their own Government, and shipping aboard Gloucester schooners to make in wages what they are forbidden to make in bait selling. Canada is delighted at a quarrel which strengthens the Dominion's weakening hold on Newfoundland, and England has the best of reasons for judiciously and prudently promoting a struggle arresting Newfoundland from its tendency to gravitate to the United States.

What good friends would all these people be but for their Governments, and how singular it is that in seeking their citizens' welfare each Government should take a course which the citizens themselves condemn. Politics has been said to make strange bedfellows. It certainly produces blunders and crimes as strange as any of those committed in the name of liberty, according to Mme. ROLAND.

SUN SPOTS.

Father RODRIGUES, astronomer in charge of the observatory at the Vatican, calls attention to observation of a sun spot having the enormous computed area of twelve thousand millions of square miles. It may mark the recurrence of a period of increased sun spots, with the invariable accompaniment of increased solar radiation.

Centuries of speculation, culminating in the application of the spectroscope to the analysis of their radiations, have established the opinion that sun spots are rifts in the photosphere caused by eruptions of unimaginable violence on the surface of the sun, through which vast fountains of intensely incandescent hydrogen are projected into space, to be drawn back again by gravitation. The attraction of gravitation being about 27 times greater on the sun than on the earth, a gas is there 27 times heavier than here. This assists in the comprehension of the eruptive forces capable of projecting volumes of gases against such an attraction for distances equal to a fourth of the solar diameter, or, say, 215,000 miles, supported by clouds of metallic vapors, and which in falling back into the sun form parabolic jets.

That sun spots are not wholly accidents is evidenced by their periodicity, in obvious obedience to some law which can only be inferred from the fact that observations begun by GALILEO, and tabulated by SCHWABE and WOLF, have shown conclusively that they occur in cycles with definite and accurately calculable intervals. Of their relation to terrestrial phenomena, we have heard less in recent years than would be interesting. Sir WILLIAM HERSCHEL collected a mass of statistics tending to show that there was an intimate relation between the number of sun spots and the price of breadstuffs, prices being low when there are few sun spots and high when they are numerous. His conclusion was that the fewer the sun spots, the more favorable the solar radiation to the growth of crops. There is no reason to question that his observations were accurate, but the conclusion he drew from them has not been sustained by later studies of the statisticians. Profs. LOVERING and LOOMIS conducted researches tending to show that after each period of numerous and exceptional sun spots, but not coinciding with them except in the relation of effect to possible cause, there has been a marked increase in terrestrial fertility; so that while it is true that numerous sun spots and high prices for "corn" may coincide, the reason that low prices and few sun spots coincide is because the productiveness of the earth has been quickened by impulses which continue operative through a period of years.

Speculations of this kind were very attractive to the astronomical mathematicians up to about 1870, when they seemed to lose interest. We do not remember to have seen any authoritative figures on the subject since those compiled by Prof. JEVONS appeared some twenty years ago. During this interval we have had several periods of increased and diminished sun spot occurrence, very accurately observed, and statistics of corn and its associated grains are easily procurable. It would, however, scarcely repay a layman to undertake this investigation, and the fact that the speculative astronomers are neglecting it warrants the conclusion that the coincidences between solar and terrestrial phenomena are less obvious than they appeared to be when Sir WILLIAM HERSCHEL studied them.

A HINT FROM LONDON.

The opening of London's new $30,000,000 street has several lessons for New York. We are now about where London was when the work just completed might have been done for a tithe of its cost, and there are similar problems pressing upon us which are already suffering for lack of foresight. We are compelled, for example, to provide a plant to purify our water because we cannot now afford to purchase the land which would have enabled us to control the sources of our water, and to keep it uncontaminated instead of purifying it after defilement.

Our street problem is even worse than London's, because London lacks our skyscrapers whose inmates crowd our sidewalks. Hence London's traffic problem is vehicular, rather than pedestrian. London has no street where walkers use the wagon way as they do in Nassau Street, and must soon do elsewhere, perhaps to the exclusion of wagons except at certain hours. London has no surf within its borders, hence it has no opportunity such as we have to preserve the foreshore for public use, instead of allowing it to be preempted for private enjoyment. Occupants of a short mile of houses exclude Brooklyn's general population from enjoyment of the river front, which ought to have been put to the same use as Riverside Park. This blunder is being permitted again in the Rockaway region, where the bay and ocean shores are being absorbed by those who appreciate them more than those responsible for shaping the city's future. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and costs less. New York, like London, has needs which can be supplied now at a cost of thousands, and which will be unattainable when the cost is in millions.

SWEET GIRL UNDERGRADUATES.

That is a very dark saying which Mr. ANDREW CARNEGIE has promulgated to the female students of Dundee University College, in advising them to "cut their hair short for hygienic reasons, but to retain their long-haired ways."

We wonder what he really meant by it. The second branch of the proposition is of course perfectly clear. The "long-haired ways" of women have been familiar and delightful to mankind from the dynasty of RAMESES to that of ROOSEVELT, and have, during all these generations, secured the race from the danger of "suicide." Beauty has continued to draw us "by a single hair," and more powerfully by the multiple thereof involved in "a head." The tangles of Neaera's have enmeshed mankind, and will continue to do so so long as mankind is mankind. Sweet girl undergraduates with their golden hair will, in the form of "coeds," make matches before they come to be graduates, to the relief of the apprehensions of the President of the United States—"for he lacks soldiers."

What troubles us is, what are the "hygienic reasons"? None such, that we know of, have been admitted by the consensus of mankind, or the doctors thereof. If they exist in Scotland, they must be peculiar to it. At the time when Scotchmen were as odious in London as Germans now are, and for much the same reasons, there was, to be sure, a South British imputation of a North British malady, of which the period was supposed to be a septennial. MACAULAY treats the supposition as a fact. But, for this malady, cutting the hair was neither remedial nor prophylactic. The only palliatives were abundant sulphur and frequent posts, such as those which have handed down to posterity the name of the good Duke of ARGYLE. If the occasion still existed which his Grace so nobly met, we have no doubt that Mr. CARNEGIE would prove equal to it, and that ornamental scratching posts would appear at all needed cross-roads, with neat inscriptions testifying to the munificence of the donor, and that around each would revolve a psoric chorus, "GOD bless the guid ANDREW CARNEGIE." But, even if the occasion still existed, it is hard to see how shingling the human hair would serve to meet it. It is for a larger and visibler and superficial instead of sub-cutaneous parasite that that remedy would alone prove efficacious. And of course Mr. CARNEGIE does not mean that.

Moreover, it would be interesting to know the foundations of his belief that short hair in women is compatible with "long-haired ways." The experience of mankind is to the contrary effect. A girl of collegiate age with her hair cut is, to the casual eye, only an inferior kind of boy. Since, and before, St. PAUL remarked that the glory of a woman is her hair, it has been considered that her shingling her head was, on the part of lovely woman, a token of masculinity. At the time of the Beecher trial, a generation ago, a clever woman remarked that all she could make out about the case was that all the women concerned wore their hair short and all the men wore theirs long, thus indicating a reversal of the normal position of the sexes. Let us hope that the lassies to whom the philanthropist addressed himself will not take him too seriously, but will retain their long hair in retaining their long-haired ways. We have no real apprehension that they will take him too seriously, or that they will cut off their hair on easier terms than a satisfactory endowment apiece.

BERNHARDT AND CUBA.

Players of international fame laying many lands under tribute to their art should speak civilly of the people of all of them at all times, or it is likely on occasion to be the worse for them. If BERNHARDT really said of the Cubans that they were half-civilized negroes in dress suits, it is little wonder that the islanders tear down the playbills which announce her reappearance among them and explode in paroxysms of polyglot blasphemy at the magnificent impudence of her intentions. Her managers have cabled her in Paris requesting her to deny the allegation and scarify the allegators, and they hope that this may placate the infuriated populace and turn its rancors into sentiments of welcome such as she is accustomed to meet and to which her genius entitles her. Even if it begins to be touched with an October tint, showing Autumn's approaches and the season of the withered and the falling and the fallen leaf, it is still genius, and there is no dweller of the isle, male or female, throughout all its boundaries who is likely ever to be entertained by a finer one.

There is not any doubt that the great actress will with the speed of improvisation and indignant resentment formulate and issue a denial covering the whole ground of complaint, that she ever said anything of the kind. On the contrary, she will most likely declare that she always cherished an impetuous affection for all Cubans very difficult to restrain, and always spoke of them in terms of appreciation worthy to be embodied in the language of poetry and sung to the accompaniment of the island's mandolins and guitars. That she will put the passion of her art into these declarations is more than probable, and if she does it is difficult to see how the islanders can withhold belief from them. She may have made some of the remarks under censure about Haiti or Santo Domingo, with their riffraff of polychromatic constituencies oblivious of art and its claims as so many monkeys in the wilderness. But she never meant any of them for the Cubans. They were a different sort altogether, wearing the flower of cultivation and refinement as the cockatoo of their regions its many-colored topknot. Old oracles have taken note that when the blood is hot "how prodigal the soul lends the tongue vows." The actress's blood may be assumed to be superheated at the prospect of the alienation of one of her subject realms and tributaries, and it is altogether in order that she should make a lively play for its retention. How her feudatories and vassals are going to take it is a question which their action alone will determine. Should they prove implacable there will be nothing to do but forego her visit there and switch her traveling train off on the lines of some other transatlantic principality.

It is much to be hoped that she may make it up with Cuba and that the grim-visaged indignation of the isle may smooth its wrinkled front under the flatiron of her explanations, coming out with a bright polish of welcome to mirror the smile with which her much-experienced countenance would greet the same. The tempest raised in the matter is not of the customary Caribbean type, black-winged and shattering, but is rather of the teapot variety, to ebb out pretty soon in sibilant diminuendo and a wreath or two of vapor. The lady ought to have a successful engagement there, without a catcall or any missile more dishonoring than a bouquet thrown at her from one end of the island to the other.

Railroading on Long Island.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

For twenty years it has been my pleasure and fate to travel on the Long Island Railroad—pleasure under the old management, when the trains were always on time and the road ran for the accommodation of the public; fate under the new management, with reduced trains, slow, uncertain, and unkempt. They do say that in time all will be well. This has been the cry for three years, and I certainly think will be the cry until the day of judgment.

WOMEN AT MASS MEETINGS.

Voters Barred from Jerome Rally to Make Room for Them?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If a political mass meeting has for its purpose the getting together of voters that the candidate and other speakers may explain the situation and the candidate's position, and thereby gain public support, I think that the Jerome mass meeting held last night would tend rather to defeat such a purpose than aid it, and for this reason: Practically only those who had tickets were admitted, although the papers stated that only boxes and seats on the stage would be reserved.

A friend and myself tried to attend, expecting to take our chances with the rest of the crowd. We got there about 7 o'clock and found that the public were only admitted to the gallery, which we found was already filled. The front entrance was barred by a cordon of police who demanded tickets of all who approached. No one was allowed to stand anywhere near. We had the pleasure of standing opposite and seeing carriages and cabs drive up, and elegantly dressed ladies and gentlemen enter as though it were a theatre or opera. The ladies seemed to be in the majority, with many young girls, from fourteen to sixteen.

How can any one imagine that a meeting called for a serious political purpose can be benefited by turning it into a show for idle women and children to the exclusion of voters? I think not, and if Mr. Jerome and his managers could have heard the comments made by the crowd on the outside they would be disillusioned. If Jerome's enemies had arranged the meeting they would have been satisfied with the outcome. Myself and friend will vote for him, but in my humble opinion it will be better not to have that kind of mass meeting repeated.

The Choice Before Voters.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to state a few facts and reasonable inferences that make a choice for Mayor by a conscientious voter who is tired of choosing the least of three evils exceedingly difficult.

1. Tammany is held together by "the cohesive power of public plunder." Mr. McClellan, a scholar and a gentleman, personally "straight," but withal somewhat of a hypocrite, (or, with his entourage, he could not so glibly talk about an honest administration,) aims, with the help of Tammany, to become President. To attain this end he lends his respectability to cloak Tammany's crookad designs. A vote for him is really a vote for a set of shameless political grafters.

2. Mr. Ivins's candidacy seems hardly worth consideration. He was not nominated to be elected.

3. Mr. Hearst is a political adventurer. He promises a great deal more than he can perform. He is essentially a demagogue.

4. But the most damning fact about all three parties, Tammany, the Republicans, and the Municipal Ownership, is that they did not indorse Mr. Jerome. If for this neglect the people do not punish them by ignoring their candidates and voting only for Jerome, they will not be worthy to be called free and independent. A JEROME DEMOCRAT.

Labels for Shrubs in the Parks.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Yesterday while passing through Central Park I saw a group of children, who probably were coming from school, arguing about the name of a bush that struck their attention for its peculiarities.

"Mister, can you tell us the name of this bush?" asked one of them as I approached.

"I am a bad botanist, my dear boys, so I am sorry I can't be your umpire," I responded.

They continued arguing, and I made my way home. As I strolled along an idea occurred to me. Should not the Department of Parks mark every tree, bush, or plant, especially those along the walks, with their names in plain English, so that not only the children, but the adults might become familiar with their names? It would cost little compared with the benefit rendered to those who love to know the beauties of nature, and every soul who strolls through the Park would become familiar with the names of Mother Nature's wonders. Intimidation Tactics Already.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In attempting to convert one to vote for Jerome I heard the following: The citizen was told that the Inspectors mark each and every ballot, so that they can tell how one voted; and, further, that the ballots as well as the stumps, which are torn off after voting, are numbered, and the number is on the book, and therefore one's vote is known. Of course, this is told for the purpose of intimidating the voter. Now, will you not please publish, and keep on publishing every day, that all such stories are not true, and manufactured only for the purpose of intimidation?

Republicans Who Will Vote for McClellan.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I hope you do not consider it out of place for me to express to you my most sincere congratulations for the stand you have taken in the pending city campaign. Although an enrolled Republican voter, nevertheless I shall vote for McClellan and Jerome, and I know a number of men (Republicans) who will do the same.

A Glad Cry.

From The Washington Star.

The President on this journey will become fairly familiar with "the rebel yell." It is a searching cry, and comes from the heart. Had he been old enough, he would probably have made its acquaintance forty-odd years ago, when it was in its lusty youth. Then, as a Union soldier, he would have charged it. Now it tickles his friendly ear and gives him only pleasure. He will hear it wherever he goes. It is the same in Virginia as in Louisinna, in North Carolina as in Florida. It is all the better for not being a product of machine politics. One hears it at its best when the occasion is industrial or patriotic, rather than partisan, and when it is spontaneous and does not show the influence of the drillmasters of the stump. Roosevelt is the sort of man to like that sort of cry.

A Question of Which.

From The Washington Post.

Secretary Shaw is apparently exempt from the President's decision that Cabinet officers shall make campaign speeches only in their own States. Mr. Shaw will not know how many States are his'n until the delegates are selected.

Exempt.

From The Washington Post.

By Executive order the President exempts the Cabinet from the operation of his strongly urged policy of publicity.

AGAIN.

The President is in the South,
They make him feel in clover,
And for about the millionth time
The Civil War is over.

The Dragon.

From The Ottawa Free Press.

The latest thing in dress is a snakeskin coat for motorists. Smell, noise, pace, garb are now all in keeping. The reckless chauffeur who, regardless of his own life or the lives of others, treads the primrose path that leads not to the arctic regions, will now require no change of dress when he goes to his own place.

A Horrid Doubt.

Tramp—Ye-, but how am I to know that all of a sudden your dog won't quit barking?

"THE CLANSMAN."

Thomas Dixon, the Author, Tells How It Was Received.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to correct the misleading account of the so-called hostile demonstration in the South against my play "The Clansman."

The statement that the play was hissed at Columbia is absolutely false. The villains were hissed, the hero and heroine cheered. The play as a whole was received by an audience of 2,000 people with the same enthusiasm with which it has been greeted in every Southern city. This reception has been in every way remarkable. In many places the hotels have been unable to find accommodations for the out-of-town people. Every seat is sold the day the box office is opened, and in many instances tickets have been sold by local speculators for $10 each. No theatre is large enough to hold the crowds, and the best evidence of what people in the South think of the play is found in the fact that hundreds who witness a matinée come back and struggle in line to buy standing room for the evening.

The "hostile" demonstration at Columbia was a complete fiasco—a put-up job by young friends of a jay editor who had been writing columns of editorial abuse of the play before he had seen it. These youngsters arranged their plans for the "demonstration" at the hotel before the matinée. A gentleman who overheard them reported the fact to me. The scheme was gotten up in order that it might be wired to New York. Its utter failure made no difference to the man who worked the wires, however. He sent his report just the same. In the simplicity of his rural soul he felt sure that he could forestall the judgment of the metropolis.

At the matinée I refused to answer the curtain call, fearing that any disturbance in such a crowd of women might cause a panic.

In the evening, a special detail of officers in citizens' clothes were present. Fearing that I would not answer the call again, one of the young men, posing as a friend, came behind the scenes and begged me between each act to respond. At the end of the third act I did so, and the half dozen members of the clique began to hiss. They were drowned in a tumult of applause. I stood for a moment looking into the faces of the three leaders, who were seated together immediately before me in the second row of the orchestra. They repeated their hisses, and the crowd again drowned them in a roar of applause. I began to laugh at them, and the audience followed my example. At the end of my speech of thanks I turned to the young men, cracked a joke at their expense, and withdrew, with the whole house laughing at them.

They followed me to my hotel and tried to provoke a fight in the presence of my wife. One of them, later in the evening, came up stairs without announcement and attempted to force himself into my room after Mrs. Dixon had retired.

The less said about such men as representatives of Southern opinion the better. Such critics are always a man's best friends. THOMAS DIXON, JR.

Mr. Osborne's Oratory.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

When Mr. Osborne in his speech of acceptance essayed to criticise Mr. Jerome for "spectacular raids with axe and hammer and hatchet, breaking down doors and violating the fundamental rights of every citizen against unreasonable and arbitrary search and oppression," was he not slightly forgetful of what Judge O'Brien said in People vs. Patrick, in the New York Court of Appeals, (182 N. Y., Pp. 190, 191:)

"If the orator of antiquity—Antony—could thus have moved men's minds, who can doubt that the modern orator who tried this case made a great impression upon the minds of the jury, since human nature is the same in all ages, as he pointed to the gaping self-inflicted wounds of his witness and flourished the bloody knife with which they were inflicted, as the surest pledge of his sincerity and the highest proof of his devotion to the cause of truth?"

Does not the old adage with reference to residents of glass houses still obtain?

How Women Can Help Jerome.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

One hears much about "the people," but, as Mr. Jerome tells us, when it comes to voting it is the political machines which control elections. One hears also much about women and the influence for good they are supposed to exert. Is not this the time when that influence should be used in the true and good cause which Mr. Jerome represents, and used not only in talk but still more in deeds? It is true that the women of New York cannot express themselves in votes, but there is another way in which they may help. Let each woman who is interested in the welfare of the city and the country, in the political welfare of all the people, send her contribution, however small, to the Jerome campaign fund. A dollar or two would mean a pair of gloves less this Winter, and surely that would be no great sacrifice where so much is at stake.

As to Filters.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your correspondent "F. B." refers to a letter from "C. E." referring to a letter from "R. J." in which "F. B." says that "R. J." says that "C. E." is a poor adviser.

But then, if a domestic filter is in "R. J.'s" opinion better than a municipal filter, in "C. E.'s" opinion, is "C. E.'s" or "R. J.'s" or "F. B.'s" opinion the better opinion?

Can you tell? Can any one except an expert tell, and if no one but the expert can tell, and he will not tell, what in Hades is the use?

A ROMANCE OF THE ROCKS.

An ocean Swell
To a Mermaid belle
Said: Won't you elope with me?
You shall wear my crest,
And forever rest,
In the light of the moon-swept sea.

You shall travel wide
On the flowing tide,
In the trough that follows me;
While your hair is drest
By the combing crest
Of the billows of the sea.

While you float in your nest
On the Ocean's breast
I'll murmur my love to thee.
And we'll drift alway,
While seafolk say,
"They're the sweetheartsof the sea."

But Old Neptune,
Who heard them spoon,
Stirred the ocean into foam.
So the Swell couldn't wait
To hear his fate,
And the Mermaid stayed at home.

MASONIC SIGN USED ON GREAT CONDUCTORS

Herbert, Sousa, Damrosch, and Franko Will Appear Together.

NO QUESTION OF PRECEDENCE

Except an Offer to be Last—Final Appearance of Mme. Blauvelt on the Concert Stage.

Great is the power of the Masonic sign. Nobody will tell just which one was used, because that would be revealing the secrets of the order, but some one signaled either distress or fellowship among musicians of New York recently, and, behold, something happened that has scarcely been known before.

Four great conductors—Walter Damrosch, Victor Herbert, John Philip Sousa, and Nahan Franko—agreed to go on the same platform, the same day, and lead the same orchestra, and not a question of precedence was raised for the Masons to settle. There were other miracles, but this will stand as sufficient to prove the potency of the sign.

The occasion is a concert to be given by St. Cecile Lodge No. 568 in Carnegie Hall next Sunday afternoon. It is to raise a maintenance fund for the tuberculosis hospital which the masons plan to build in the Adirondacks. St. Cecile is the musical lodge of the order, and is known in every part of the world where Masons abide.

Announcement of plans for the concert was made yesterday by George Loesch, for St. Cecile Lodge. Although orchestras seldom volunteer their services for a benefit, more than 125 members of the leading organizations of the city have offered theirs on this occasion. They will be led by Messrs. Herbert and Sousa in their own compositions, and Messrs. Damrosch and Franko in operatic selections.

Mr. Loesch was asked in what order these conductors would appear, and if no difficulty had been found in assigning to them their places on the programme.

"No question has been raised," he said, "except by one conductor, who came to me and said, 'Somebody must be last, and it might as well be me.'"

Mme. Lillian Blauvelt will say farewell to the concert stage on this occasion. She will sing two selections that figured potently in her success when Anton Seidl first helped her to become known—the soprano aria "Una Voce," from "The Barber of Seville," and "Sicilian Vespers." Gwilym Miles will also sing. The Brooklyn Oratorio Society will give the "Hallelujah Chorus," led by Walter Henry Hall.

A RUSSIAN PLAYHOUSE.

To be Opened by Paul Orleneff and Mme. Nasimoff.

Those who recall the highly interesting performances given last season by Paul Orleneff, Mme. Nasimoff, and their company of Russian players will be glad to know that there are to be further opportunities to see them. They are about to open what is described as "the first Russian art theatre in America." It will be known as Orleneff's Lyceum, at 15 to 17 East Third Street. The first performance will take place on Friday night, the bill for that evening being S. Naidenoff's "Children Vanushin."

Other plays to be given by this company during the Winter will include Tolstoy's "Christian," "Power and Darkness," and "Fruits of Enlightenment"; Gorki's "Children of the Sun" and "Night Lodging"; Chekhov's "Uncle Vania" and "Chaika"; Gogol's "Revisor"; Ibsen's "Ghosts" and "Master Builder" and "Hedda Gabler"; Hauptmann's "Sunken Bell" and "Solitary Souls"; Herman Bahr's "Apostle," and Pinski's "Family Zwee."

Mme. Nasimoff, who is to appear in a repertory of her own, will include, among other plays, Oscar Wilde's "Salome," Herman Bahr's "Star," "Zaza," and "The Doll's House."

RICHEPIN'S "DON QUIXOTE."

Produced in Paris—Regarded as Lacking in Dramatic Qualities.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 21.—The Comédie Française has opened the theatrical season with an adaptation of "Don Quixote," by Jean Richepin, which does not seem destined to have a long run. It is lacking in dramatic qualities, although from a purely literary and poetical point of view the critics praise it highly.

The scenery, however, is most picturesque, being copied from the famous illustrations by Gustave Doré, and M. Leloir made a great hit as the chivalrous knight.

VICTOR HERBERT CONCERTS.

The First To-night with May Naudain as the Soloist.

Victor Herbert will begin his Sunday night concerts at the Majestic Theatre this evening and will continue them each week during the Winter.

Miss May Naudain of the "It Happened in Nordland" company, will be the soloist this evening. The programme includes "Roman Carnival," by Berlioz; "Liebestraume," by Liszt; "Trot de Cavallerie," by Rubinstein. The second part of the programme will be devoted mostly to Mr. Herbert's compositions.

Eisenstaedt-Philipsborn Wedding.

Miss Grace M. Philipsborn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. Philipsborn of 4,357 Vincennes Avenue, Chicago, is to be married to Dr. Milton K. Eisenstaedt, son of Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Eisenstaedt, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 1, at the home of the bride's parents. Only the immediate relatives will be present.

M. Bouxmann, French Basso, Here.

M. Bouxmann, the French basso, who is to appear in concert with Mme. Calve this season, arrived yesterday on La Touraine.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Mme. Helena Modjeska yesterday announced the plans for her coming tour, which is under the management of John Murray. She will begin her season at Pittsburg on Nov. 6 and continue through the South. She will not play in New York City.

F. F. Proctor has engaged Neston Lennon as a member of his All-Star Stock Company. Mr. Lennon will make his first appearance with the organization next week in "Lady Windemere's Fan."

ARMENIAN ORPHANS' GIFT.

Rug Representing American Flag Hung in State Department.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—A beautiful rug, made in imitation of the United States flag, has been hung in the anteroom of the diplomatic room in the State Department. It is entirely of silk, and is 7 feet 8 inches long, 4 feet wide, and an inch thick.

It is the product of the looms in the industrial establishment of the orphanage maintained at Harput by American contributions and has been presented to the United States Government by Armenian orphans out of gratitude for American benevolence.

SHERLOCK HOLMES AT FAULT.

Nabbed a Red-Haired, Sore-Fingered Boy, but 'Twas the Wrong Boy.

Acting as his own detective, James L. Platt, a retired dentist of 136 Herkimer Street, Brooklyn, set out yesterday to find a suit which had been taken from his home last Wednesday by a boy to be pressed. The tailor gave back the clothing to the same boy, but it didn't reach its owner.

Platt's house servant and the tailor agreed in describing a boy about seventeen years old, with red hair and a sore finger. Returning from Manhattan yesterday Platt spied a red-haired boy with a sore finger at the bridge. He followed the lad aboard a Lexington Avenue train and off at Nostrand Avenue.

"Young man, you are under arrest," said he.

"What for?" asked the astonished youth.

"Oh, come, now, I know you; you're the red-headed kid that made off with my suit," Platt replied, and marched him over to the tailor's shop.

"That's not the boy. I never saw him before," was the tailor's verdict. Platt released the boy with apologies, but the youth hurried over to the Gates Avenue Court and got a summons. Magistrate Furlong advised both to drop the matter.

"All this comes of trying to be a Sherlock Holmes on your own hook," he remarked.

TEN KISSES A DAY FOR HIM.

Too Fervent Sweetheart Signs a Contract in Court Before His Wedding.

Alexandria Chuski consented to marry Wadiso Boroughoski in the Second District Police Court, Jersey City, yesterday after he had signed a contract not to kiss her more than ten times a day. Both are employed by a family in the Guttenburg section.

"Often," the girl told the Court, in broken English, "he would keep me to kiss me until my dinner would burn and it was late on the table." She had him arrested when no other measures availed to stop his waylaying her.

Boroughoski interposed with declarations of his love for the girl, and begged the Court to let him marry. The girl's lawyer drew up a parole, which the defendant signed, in these words:

I, Wadiso Boroughoski, do hereby promise and swear that during the period of my first year of married life and annually thereafter I will kiss my wife no more than ten times per day, to be distributed as follows:

Five before noon.

Five in the afternoon before supper.

And I further promise that should I exceed the ten kisses per diem, as above set forth, my wife, Alexandria Boroughoski, nee Chuski, may complain to Justice Manning of the Second Criminal Court of Jersey City, and I will consider my parole broken and take the consequences.

The Judge married them then and there.

DON'T SAY "DEVIL" IN COURT.

It's Against the Law, Magistrate Tells Police Witness.

"Don't say 'devil' in court if you want to keep out of jail. It's a crime written in the statute books," said Magistrate Whitman in Essex Market yesterday. Policeman Crowe of the Madison Street Precinct, the witness admonished, was appearing against Samuel Fienberg and Thomas Caiello, each 19 years old, accused of burglary.

"It was 2:30 in the morning; I heard shots, and I saw Roundsman Becker plowing his way through Montgomery Street," said Crowe. "I followed, running like the devil until—"

"Officer! Officer!" exclaimed the court.

"Yes, I ran like the devil—"

"That's enough!" cried the Magistrate, cutting off the end of the testimony. "I repeat I won't hear it again! This is no barroom! It is a crime to use such language in a court of justice. If it happens again I'll report you to the Commissioner."

The prisoners were held in $1,000 bail each, while Crowe held his tongue until he got out of court.

FOUNDATION FREE OF DEBT.

Long Island Diocese Raises $32,000 and Gets the Benson Gift.

The Rev. Paul F. Sweet, Superintendent of the Church Charity Foundation at Garden City, announces that the amount necessary to get the sum promised last March by Mrs. Arthur W. Benson, Miss Mary Benson, and Frank Sherman Benson, which aggregated $40,000, has been obtained. The money given by the Benson family was on condition that the Long Island Episcopal Diocese provide the remaining $31,000, which was the amount of the debt on the foundation.

According to the conditions the amount had to be raised before Oct. 1, and by special effort on the part of every clergyman of the Long Island Episcopal Diocese this amount and an additional $1,000 was obtained and the charity is now free from debt.

A DAY'S WEDDINGS.

The marriage of Miss Elizabeth F. Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel W. Brown of Belle Haven, Conn., and William Strange Norton took place yesterday in St. Bartholomew's Church. The Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks officiated. Miss Gladys Fiske Handy of New York was the maid of honor. Miss Dorothea Brown of Brooklyn, Miss Harriet Crowell of Atlantic Highlands, Miss Caroline S. Norton, a sister of the bridegroom, and Miss Katherine Shepard of New Haven were the bridesmaids. The ushers were William B. Brown, a brother of the bride; Capt. James C. McLeer, Cornelius De Bevoise of Brooklyn, and Charles Curla, Jr., of New York. Dr. Nathaniel R. Norton, a brother of the bridegroom, was best man. A reception at the Buckingham Hotel followed the ceremony.

FORBES—VERNAM.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., Oct. 21.—Miss Gertrude R. Vernam, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert H. Vernam, was married to Archibald Forbes in St. Peter's Church this afternoon by the Rev. Wynant Vanderpool, assisted by the Rev. William M. Hughes, rector of the Church of the Redeemer. The bride was gowned in white silk and was given away by her father. She was attended by Miss Helen Turnbull of New York as maid of honor. The bridesmaids were Miss Mary L. Pyle of Philadelphia, Miss Sarah Fuller of New York, Miss Edith Forbes, sister of the bridegroom, and the Misses Emeline and Edith Vernam, sisters of the bride. The best man was Philip Curtis of Boston.

WALTHALL—STONE.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., Oct. 21.—At the home of her uncle, Francis D. Upton, in High Street, Orange, this afternoon, Miss Mary Brevoort Stone was married to Lieut. Hugh Lawson Walthall, United States Army, who is stationed at the Presidio, Monterey, Cal. The ceremony was performed by Bishop J. H. Van Buren of Porto Rico. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Gretta Adriance Stone, who was maid of honor. The ushers were Lieuts. McKie, Barclay, McNaire, and Moller, fellow-officers of the bridegroom.

To Send Back Biondi's Group.

In the suit of Ernesto Biondi against the Trustees of the Metropolitan Museum of Art for damages for failure to exhibit his group "The Saturnalia," Justice Leventritt ruled yesterday that the Trustees may return the group to Italy by any regular line. On paying the freight and notifying Biondi their responsibility ends.

NO MORE "SHIP DIET," SAYS AMERIKA CATERER

MENUS LIKE BIG HOTELS

Meals at All Hours Find Favor with Passengers—New Boats Will All Adopt the Plan.

W. A. Autor, general manager of the Carlton Hotel, London, who had charge of the Ritz restaurant on the new liner Amerika on her maiden trip, is enthusiastic about his first experiment in ocean catering. In his opinion menus on the great ocean liners will soon be equal to those of the finest hotels in New York, London, or Paris.

Epicures who have complained that, after three days at sea, roast beef, curry and rice, and blanc mange all taste alike, will be able, he declares, to enjoy ocean voyages without having to tighten their belts, Indian fashion, until the ship reaches port. The old-fashioned plum duff, sea pie, lobscouse, gunroom goose, and other familiar items of ship diet have had their day, says the caterer. Hereafter the menus will be almost the same as those on Fifth Avenue.

"The success of our ocean restaurant experiment has surpassed all expectations," Mr. Autor said last night. "Men and women in evening dress dined in the restaurant, decorated with lilies of the valley, roses, and orchids, and listened to the Hungarian band as cosily as if they had been in the Carlton or the Waldorf.

"The motion was hardly perceptible in the big vessel, although we had a heavy sea on Wednesday. In less than five years I believe that a la carte meals will be served on all the big Atlantic liners.

"The refrigerating machinery worked perfectly, enabling us to have fresh supplies, peaches and grapes, as well as poultry and game, throughout the voyage. The ventilation of the restaurant surpassed anything I have seen on land.

"There are no fixed hours for meals. Passengers can promenade the deck and come in when they feel hungry. The restaurant is open from 7 o'clock in the morning until midnight. One hundred and twenty guests can be seated at once.

"The prices on board do not exceed the tariff of first-class restaurants in New York, London or Paris, and the wines are listed a little cheaper than on shore."

The Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, sister ship to the Amerika, is expected to be ready next May, and will be fitted with a restaurant on the same lines. It is understood that the two new Cunarders, now under construction, will be similarly equipped. The restaurant is situated on the promenade deck.

This is Mr. Autor's first visit to the United States. The two things which have caused him most astonishment, he says, are the skyscrapers and the tremendous, unremittent energy of the people.

PAINE AND ROCKEFELLER.

Ingersoll's Praise of One Adapted to the Other.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Oct. 21.—Barcus M. Brown, a real estate dealer whose home and allotment adjoin Forest Hill, recently published a book called "A Study of John D. Rockefeller." In it Mr. Brown made a vigorous defense of the oil king.

Many paragraphs in Brown's book in praise of Rockefeller are practically the same as those used by Robert G. Ingersoll to praise Thomas Paine. Here is the deadly parallel:

Mr. Ingersoll wrote—If to love your fellowmen more than self is goodness, Thomas Paine was good. If to be in advance of your time—to be a pioneer in the direction of right—is greatness, Thomas Paine was great. If to avow your principles and discharge your duty in the presence of death is heroic, Thomas Paine was a hero.

Mr. Brown wrote: If to love others more than one's self is goodness, John D. Rockefeller is good. If to live in advance of one's time, to be first upon the ground in the direction of progress, is greatness, John D. Rockefeller is great. If to follow one's faith and do one's duty in the presence of threatening death is heroic, John D. Rockefeller is a hero.

Mr. Brown said to-day that perhaps the writings of Ingersoll had had their effect on his writings, but only unconsciously.

HANDICAPS OF OUR ENVOYS.

Mr. Meyer Says They Have to Pick Up Crumbs of Information.

BOSTON, Oct. 21.—A reception was given to George Von L. Meyer, the Ambassador to Russia, at the Hotel Brunswick this afternoon by the Essex Club. In the course of an address Mr. Meyer said:

"In the future it will be necessary for Congress to make largely increased appropriations to the State Department for diplomatic requirements. Our representatives abroad should be on an equal footing with the diplomatic representatives of other nations. They should be equally well informed of events that are transpiring at home and abroad by cable and otherwise. Ambassadors should not be obliged to pick up crumbs of information through the kindness of their colleagues or be dependent upon the generosity of The Associated Press.

"There is another matter in connection with the Diplomatic Corps that our Government should consider, and that is owning the Embassy or Legation Buildings in the various capitals. It is undignified and undemocratic not to do so."

In speaking of Russia, Mr. Meyer said: "His Imperial Majesty has extended religious liberty, and even before it was known that peace could be established he granted to the nation the Douma, or National Assembly. In doing this the Czar feels that he has placed in reality a burden on the shoulders of his people, though some have called it a gift."

IMMIGRATION CONFERENCE.

Forty-one States to be Represented at the Meeting Here in December.

The principal officers of the National Civic Federation held a meeting yesterday with representative men from different States over the coming National Conference on Immigration, to be held in this city on Dec. 6, 7, and 8. In a letter to President August Belmont announcing the appointment of ten delegates to the conference, which was read at the meeting, the Governor of Hawaii said:

"We shall be most happy to co-operate in this conference. Hawaii is the outpost of American civilization, and the people of this Territory feel that the contest for the settlement of this country by Americans or by Orientals can only be settled by the encouragement of the immigration of Americans, or such people as are eligible to become Americans, to the Territory.

"It is my definite policy to Americanize these islands and to prevent them from being Orientalized, and to that end a liberal land policy is being pursued and lands are being opened up to settlement so that homesteaders can easily obtain homes to settle and cultivate; the planters and other employers are being induced to employ Americans. We seek to supply employment to the settler that we may have our labor domiciled in the country."

It was announced at yesterday's meeting that forty-one States would be represented in the conference.

CALVE COULDN'T UNDERSTAND

Nor Could Mr. Smith—Linguistic Complications Over the Wire.

Mme. Calvé will occupy a box at the Manhattan Theatre on Monday night to see Mme. Kalich in "Monna Vanna." The box was engaged yesterday. The person who conducted the negotiations had his troubles in getting it, but they were nothing compared to the agony he suffered in conveying the news of his success to Mme. Calvé.

He wished Mme. Calvé to know that he, alone and unaided had been instrumental in procuring the box which she so much desired. When he had accomplished his object he called up the singer on the telephone.

"Mme. Calvé?" he said nervously.

"Oui, oui! C'est moi," was the musical reply on the wire.

"This is Mr. Smith. I think Mr. Brown mentioned my name to you with regard to a box which you were desirous—"

"Pardon, M'sieur Smeet!" said Mme. Calvé. "Je ne comprends pas."

Mr. Smith was astonished, but manfully continued:

"I have, after some difficulty and through the good offices of a friend—"

"Vous etês très drôle, M'sieur," interrupted Mme. Calvé. "Je regret que je ne parle pas Anglais."

Beads of perspiration rolled down Mr. Smith's face. He thought of hanging up the receiver. But she had caught the name. He would be disgraced forever. He tried again—laboriously, manfully.

"Zhay-nay-comprong-Frongsy. You-vooly voo-box-a-teatro Manhattang. Zhey-get-gst—"

A thrill of laughter rippled over the wire. Mr. Smith collapsed. She spoke again:

"Tiens! Tiens! Je ne comprens pas du tout! Attendez, M'sier Smeet. Je chercherai un dictionnaire."

A moment later, while Mr. Smith was hanging limp at his end of the wire, at the other a second voice spoke in English:

"Mme. Calvé hardly understood all you said, Mr. Smith. Will you please repeat it?"

Then the news was communicated. The second voice said:

"Mme. Calvé wishes me to tell you how grateful—"

There was a sudden interruption. Then the diva's voice rippled over the wire again:

"Hello—M'sieur Smeet! Je vous remercie mille fois. Vous êtes un gentil homme! Vous êtes charmant! Voulez vous me faire le grand plaisir de venir ce soir dan ma loge?"

"You are entirely welcome, Mme. Calve," said Mr. Smith feebly.

Then he rang off, leaving Mme. Calvé astonished.

THEIR STAR MISSED THE SHIP.

But Away Go Colored Cake Walkers, Never Minding an Injunction.

Sixteen colored men and women, gorgeously arrayed, furnished excitement for the passengers of the outgoing American liner Philadelphia yesterday morning and their friends on the pier.

The sixteen were passengers themselves—bound for France, where they are to tour under the direction of Will Marion Cook, the negro playwright and author. As members of the band of "Memphis Students" they are known to vaudeville, and the prospect of a tour in Europe had keyed them up to concert pitch.

Under ordinary circumstances the start of such a trip would have been a milestone in the life of each of the sixteen. There were developments yesterday which lent added interest, and before the lines were cast off the members of the band were easing their superfluous energies by cake-walking on the promenade deck and scattering to the winds the fragments of legal papers which were served on them at the pier.

The papers were served individually and created momentary consternation, but Cook was on hand to say that they were without force. However, when sailing time had almost arrived and Abbie Mitchell Cook, wife of Will Marion Cook, had not appeared, there was trouble. Mrs. Cook was to be one of the main attractions of the Memphis Students, and when the manager of the production learned that she was scheduled to desert him, with others of the company, for a foreign tour, he got out an injunction against her from Justice Maddox of Brooklyn. Another injunction was issued against Ida Forsen, also of the company, by the same Judge. Argument was heard on Friday and the injunctions were dissolved.

The Philadelphia was due to sail at 10 o'clock. At 9:45 neither Mrs. Cook nor Mrs. Forsen had arrived. The tears of the Students who were on hand in time induced the Captain to hold the vessel ten minutes. During this period there was no more cakewalking. When the ten minutes' grace had expired the Philadelphia headed for the sea. Not three minutes afterward a cab was driven to the pier, and the two women who had caused all the anxiety appeared. They were half frantic, and tried to get a tug to take them down the bay to catch the steamship. They soon decided, however, to save the extra expense and take the Zealand, which sailed half an hour later.

Sewell Estate Sues Government.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—Suit was filed to-day in the United States Court of Claims to recover $14,203 from the Government for the estate of the late Senator Sewell of New Jersey. This sum, it is alleged, was illegally collected as an internal revenue tax on $1,800,000 in stocks and bonds, constituting the personal estate of the Senator. The suit is brought by the Camden Safe Deposit and Trust Company of Camden, N. J., as executor of the will of the late Senator.

DRESSED FOR RESCUE WHILE HERO WAITED

MEDAL SEEKER SWEARS OFF

Policeman Chave Now Finds the Business Too Wearing After a Small Blaze.

Charles H. Chave, a policeman of the Thirtieth Street Station, went to his desk Sergeant early yesterday morning, mopping the perspiration from his brow.

"Sarge," he said, "this police business ain't what it's cracked up to be. Next time I butt into a fire where there's women around, me for retirement and the simple life. I'm all in."

Then he told of some exasperating experiences in making what he had expected to be a heroic rescue of three women at 877 Sixth Avenue, where Jensen Brothers' restaurant was afire.

Chave was standing at Twenty-fourth Street and Sixth Avenue when a man stepped up to him and exclaimed:

"Say, officer, it's a shame to allow people to burn onions and ropes around this respectable neighborhood at this time of morning. Why don't you put a stop to it?"

Chave sniffed the air and thought he detected a real fire. The scent led him to Jensen Brothers' restaurant, where he found a blaze on the ground floor. After making hasty inquiries about the upper floors he ran to the second story and rapped on the door of the apartments of Jennie and Lizzie Neubauer, hairdressers.

"Who's there?" was the sleepy inquiry from a woman within.

"It's me—Chave—Charley Chave—a policeman; there's a fire down stairs. Come out. I want to rescue you."

"Oh my!" responded the voice. "Is there really a fire? Are you sure?" The door didn't open.

"Certainly," replied the policeman, growing impatient. "Come out, I tell you! Don't you want me to rescue you?"

"Oh yes, we want to be rescued," answered the voice. Then the door opened about a quarter of an inch and Chave caught the glint of a single eye watching him narrowly.

"Can it really be that there is a fire!" came from behind the door. Chave began to get impatient.

"Sure," said he. "Hurry up! I can't wait here all night to rescue you. What sort of a woman are you, anyhow? Don't you know enough to take a rescue when it's offered to you?"

"Gracious," responded the woman on the inside, "wait a moment until I get some clothes on and I'll come out." Chave jumped around in the hallway for ten minutes, but there was no sign of activity on the inside. Finally he rapped again with his night stick.

"Yes, yes," said the voice; "wait a moment; wait till I get my sister up; we'll be right out. Don't go away, Mr. Policeman. We want to be rescued. We'll be there in a moment."

Ten minutes more and two women finally stepped gingerly out of the door and went up to Chave, who pointed to the stairway and observed:

"That way down stairs, ladies. Now I go in further search of those who went to be saved."

He ran up another flight of stairs where Julia Demar, a masseuse lived.

"Is it possible that the house is on fire?" she asked wearily.

"Certainly; come out and be rescued," angrily replied the policeman.

"Oh my, that'll be grand," she replied. After fifteen minutes, in which Chave gave evidence of nervous collapse, she appeared and was guided down the stairs. Everybody being out of the house the fire was extinguished with $4,000 damage. The three rescued thanked the policeman, but he was too much exhausted to respond.

FISHING AT ATLANTIC CITY.

Fall Guests Make Big Catches—Plans for the Winter Season.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, Oct. 21.—Surf bathing is still indulged in daily by many persons. All the leading hotels are well filled and business this Fall has broken all precedents.

Fishing is the chief sport now, and unusually large catches are reported daily. The heaviest catch ever made in the big nets on Young's Pier was a few days ago, when ten tons were hauled in. Two tons of fish were lost through a hole torn in one of the nets.

Mrs. L. A. Carlin, wife of a Boardwalk photographer, has fallen heir to a fortune of $100,000, part of the estate of her grandfather, James Tully of Philadelphia.

Col. Thomas Potter, Jr., of Philadelphia is to have a 45-foot twin-screw cabin launch for local waters next season. It will cost $5,000, and is to be completed April 1 by an Atlantic City builder.

The New Jersey State Congress of Mothers will meet in this city on Nov. 11 and 12, and members of the local branch are making arrangements for the entertainment of the State delegates.

John Mitchell, President of the United Mine Workers' Association, and ex-Assemblyman John H. Fow of Philadelphia will address a mass meeting on the Steeplechase Pier some evening next week under the auspices of the Central Labor Union of this city.

The Atlantic City Country Club at its annual meeting in Haddon Hall elected the following officers: President, Frederick Hemsley; Vice President, Charles Evans; Treasurer, J. Haines Lippincott; Secretary, Walter E. Edge. The dates for the Fall golf tournament were arranged for Nov. 16, 17, and 18. The chief trophy will be the Governors' Cup.

Arrangements have been completed to provide visitors and residents of Atlantic City with ample amusement of a high order during the coming Winter by the Atlantic City Hotel Men's Association, which has arranged with the Steel Pier Company to keep the pier open from Oct. 23, 1905, to Jan. 27, 1906. Haley's Washington Orchestra Band will play daily. Promenade concert dances will be continued every Saturday evening, while every Sunday night there will be a band concert, with two operatic soloists.

A total of 7,500 visitors climbed the spiral staircase in the Absecon Lighthouse between Aug. 1 and Sept. 15.

Permits were issued this week for the expenditure of $500,000 for new cottages, apartment houses, and hotels. Local contractors report a scarcity of skilled workmen, especially bricklayers.

Ground has been broken for the erection of a machine shop preliminary to the construction for Andrew P. Johnson of the largest auto garage in New Jersey. It is to be finished in the Spring, at a cost of $125,000.

Douglas Leake of Philadelphia has purchased Palm Villa, on South Carolina Avenue, from Edgar Porter.

The Washington Land Company, composed of Philadelphia capitalists, is making great improvements at Longport. A yacht basin, 200 by 300 feet, capable of admitting any yacht which comes here from the Quaker City, is being dredged. The company will also build slips for twenty boats, covered and equipped with the latest improvements. The Philadelphia cottagers are organizing a yacht club.

Fifteen thousand miles in an auto without a single mishap is the record made during the past Summer by J. B. Dixon of New York, who, with Mrs. Dixon, is a guest at the Brighton. In making the run to Atlantic City Mr. Dixon covered 175 miles in a little more than three hours.

SUESINE SILK

WEARS BETTER THAN SILK

If you haven't seen Suesine Silk you can have no idea of its beauty. Too bad, for Suesine Silk is as fine and pretty as China Silk—which it so closely resembles that no one can tell the difference—and costs half as much; the touch of cotton makes it more serviceable. Is there any wonder the demand for Suesine Silk is so enormous?

Riverside Press Edition

A SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY THROUGH FRANCE AND ITALY

BY LAURENCE STERNE (MR. YORICK)

The good wine of the "Sentimental Journey" needs no bush for readers and collectors. From its first publication, in 1768, each passing generation has found it ever more delightful. So many of the more elaborate editions have depended for attractiveness upon questionable illustrations that it seems peculiarly fitting that the book should be issued in a simple and distinctive form, with a typographical treatment having some relation to the flavor of the text.

The volume is printed directly from Brimmer type on a beautiful quality of English hand-made paper. An appropriate wood-cut vignette on the title and a coat-of-arms are the only decorations. 300 numbered copies, in buckram, price, per copy, $7.50 net; postpaid.

SAYS CONTRACT CHECKS ARMOUR LINE RATES

Southern Railway Official Thinks They Are Reasonable.

SHIPPERS DON'T COMPLAIN

Charges Lower Than Could Be Made by the Carriers Themselves, Commerce Commission Is Told.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—Lincoln Green of the Southern Railway resumed the stand to-day at the private car line hearing before the Inter-State Commerce Commission. He testified that his contract with the Armour car lines for refrigeration prescribes that the charges must be reasonable and no higher than charges for like service on other lines.

"In my opinion," he said, "the present rates are lower than could be made by the carriers themselves. We have had no complaints from shippers."

It was brought out that the Armour car lines are able to handle the business economically for the reason that they have it all and are able to prepare for it.

Attorney Reichman said the selfishness of the Armour car line would induce it to maintain a reasonable rate. Mr. Northrup, counsel for the Southern Railway added that his company insisted also upon reasonable rates. Commissioner Prouty interrupted to say:

"Then it is the selfishness of the Armour line and by grace of the Southern Railway on which the shipper depends?"

Protesting that the Commissioner had stated the matter in an ungracious manner and unfairly, Mr. Northrup declared that "intelligence and business interests had built up the refrigeration business; that it was not a matter of 'grace.'"

Commissioner Prouty called attention to the reduction in refrigerator charges in Michigan, following the Michigan fruit case, in which the Michigan Central established a system lowering the charges to from $20 to $25 a car and the Armour charges to $45 a car.

"How long do you think it would have taken to bring about the decrease in rates if our inquiry had not been had?" asked the Commissioner.

Mr. Reichman replied that it was not fair to take the Michigan Central rate into consideration, for the reason that it was admitted on the stand that its system was still in an experimental stage. As to the Armour charges, he said, the tariff had been in existence only one year, and at the time the inquiry was begun the commission knew a new schedule had been prepared.

Proceedings were adjourned to Nov. 1.

WOMAN BANKRUPT LOSES.

Mrs. Muller's Effort to Cancel Lis Penden Denied by Court.

The motion made by Mrs. Franziska Muller, a voluntary bankrupt, to drop lis pendens has been denied by Justice Maddox, in the Queens County Supreme Court, because of discrepancies in her testimony and the acknowledged transfer of two parcels of property, said to be worth $88,000, to her son-in-law for $100.

Mrs. Muller, who has managed many hotels, at times having several running at once, moved to Jamaica a couple of years ago. She owned property on Fulton Street, that place, valued at $65,000. Part of that property she has placed in the hands of Randolph White, Jr., a real estate aent, to sell. White subsequently sued and obtained a verdict for a commission of $700. The defendant then made a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. When she was examined before a Referee she said she had no property and that her business was working in a kitchen. It was brought out that she had transferred the Jamaica property and a large apartment house in Manhattan to her son-in-law, Joseph Hauser, for $100, Hauser, to whom the property had been transferred in November, 1904, transferred it last August to Arthur Torman, who the same day made a contract of sale for the Manhattan property to a man named Levy. The desire to give Levy title to the property, which was held up by the lispendens, caused Mrs. Muller to apply to the court to have the lis pendens dropped.

CLIMBED HIGH TREE TO DIE.

Body of Suicide Found Sixty Feet Up in Air in Swamp.

WESTPORT, Conn., Oct. 21.—Suspended from the limb of a hickory tree in Peals Swamp, at a height of over sixty feet, the body of a man was found by the crew of the early morning trolley car from Norwalk to this town.

It was not found feasible to have men climb the tree and remove the body, so a woodman felled the tree. The man had taken off much of his clothing, climbed up, knotted a shawl strap around his neck, and on crawling out upon the limb tied the other end around it, and then let himself down. That he lowered himself slowly to prevent the strap breaking was shown, in the opinion of Dr. Huntington, by the fact that one arm was upraised and hooked over the limb.

NO STATEHOOD, SAYS TAWNEY.

Arizona and New Mexico Not Ready for It Yet.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 21.—Congressman J. A. Tawney of Minnesota, who passed through Kansas City last night en route east at the head of the Congressional party that has been studying the Statehood question in the West, is quoted as saying:

"Conditions are not yet ripe for the admission of either Arizona or New Mexico, or of the two Territories together, into the Union. I believe that the wisest move for the two Territories at the present time would be to cease the agitation of the Statehood question."

NIAGARA FALLS RECESSION.

It is said that the Canadian side has receded 300 feet during the last 80 years.

Members of the Waterways Commission left for Niagara Falls to-day to begin this investigation.

RUSSIAN RAILWAYS TIED UP.

Men Testing the Strike Machinery—Real Demonstration Later.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 21.—The strike of railroad employes assumed a serious aspect to-day, when four great trunk lines out of Moscow were completely tied up, the other Moscow roads were embarrassed, and trains were stopped on the branch road from Nizhni-Novgorod.

The Pan-Russian Union of Railway Employes has issued a call for a general strike of all the railroads of Russia. The extent to which the call will be obeyed remains to be seen, as the union is of recent origin and its strength is an unknown quantity.

A meeting of St. Petersburg railroad men was in session at a late hour to-night and had not yet reached a decision on the question whether or not to strike.

The demands of the men are purely political, and therefore it is expected that the strike will last only long enough to serve the purpose of a demonstration. The Socialist leaders say it is intended as a test of strength, and is a curtain-raiser to a thorough and complete tie-up of the Russian railroad systems in January as an object lesson to the Government and the Douma. They say the present strike will be called off as soon as it is seen that the strike machinery is working perfectly. The call of the National Union for the strike says:

"Brothers, we have great power in our hands. The railroad employes throughout Russia share our views. The time has come to declare a general strike. Before our might the Government must give way."

The lines on which traffic has ceased are the Moscow and Kazan Road, running through important centres; the Nizhni Novgorod, Vladimir, Yaroslav, and Archangel line, running northward to the White Sea; the Riazan and Uralsk Road, which runs southeastward from Moscow, tapping the great grain regions, and the Riazan, Tamhoff, Saratoff, and Samara Line, penetrating deep into the steppes. The branch Nizhni-Novgorod Road affected is a line connecting with the Kazan and Riazan Roads.

The strikes on the other Moscow roads are partial, and are largely confined to the office forces, the men of which were intimidated into stopping work.

The Government is prepared in case the strike affects the Nicholai Railroad from Moscow to St. Petersburg, or the lines to Berlin and Vienna, to order the mobilization of the railroad battalions of the army in order to keep communication open, but it hopes the enthusiasm of the workmen will exhaust itself in a few days.

DEVERYITES CHEER ALL.

W. E. Ryan Talking Three Hours About Himself and City Ownership.

There was a heap of fun last night over in the Ninth Assembly District, where ex-Chief Devery still seems to pull a big stroke. While Mr. Devery was enjoying himself down at Far Rockaway at his brother-in-law's hotel, 2,000 Deveryites were marching through Tenth Avenue, cheering for District Attorney Jerome, Mayor McClellan, and Mr. Hearst's Assembly candidate, ex-Congressman William E. Ryan, all of whom the William S. Devery Association indorsed on Friday night. "Big Bill" had ordered over the telephone:

"Git out and hustle for everybody we've indorsed, and whoop it up for my friend Jerome!"

They did. First of all they had a parade through Tenth Avenue, led by Aleck Smith. Then they grabbed the Hearst Assembly candidate, ex-Congressman Ryan, who has always been a member of the Devery Club, and lifting him on a truck, shouted that it was Ryan's night to be indorsed. They had indorsed Mayor McClellan at Friday night's mass meeting, and they had also indorsed Jerome, so when a man in the crowd shouted "Mixed pickles," a Devery follower yelled back:

"Some one'll have to eat Devery chow-chow!"

"Speech! Speech!" yelled the crowd, addressing the Hearst Assembly candidate. "Tell us who your father was."

"My father was Col. George Ryan of the 140th New Yorks," replied the speaker. "He was killed at the battle of Antietam fighting under McClellan's father. I was born at Rochester and was educated in the public schools, at the La Salle Institute and at the Manhattan College, and I was graduated from the School of Mines of Columbia. That's who I am, if you want to know."

Then Mr. Ryan talked three hours, mostly about himself and municipal ownership.

"Three cheers for McClellan!" yelled some one.

The crowd cheered lustily, and a little man near the sidewalk yelled:

"What's the matter with William R. Hearst?"

"He's all right," shouted the crowd in chorus.

CAMPAIGN POET'S SONG.

A Few Remarks on Everybody and All Issues, from the East Side.

The campaign poet got to work yesterday over in Water Commissioner John Oakley's district, and this was what he turned out:

Every one works but Flammer;
He sits at home all day,
With his feet upon his hammer,
Not caring what they say.
Jerome has gone out chopping
With a shiny, brand-new axe;
Jim Osborne rakes up everything
From tariff law to tax.

Shearn is painting pictures
Of city frauds in gas;
He's mixing up wrong colors,
But still we'll let that pass.
Hearst is building railroads,
Although he has no lies,
While Ivins and McClellan
Are busy nailing lies.

Ahearn and Johnny Duffy
Are busy making hay;
They say they'll have more tons than Ford
Upon election day.
Cassidy and Bermel,
O'Gorman and Hal Bell,
With Mister Louis Haffen,
Are plowing boroughs well.

Newburger and Judge Ingraham
And Gildersleeve, with brooms,
Like Addoms, they are sweeping votes
To sweep them to courtrooms.
The 'is Dooley, Acritelli,
Hasbarger, Shrady, too;
They're practicing embalming,
For their business will be new.

There's Scholer and Pissani
And Carey, Obendorf;
They're digging graves for Dooley's crowd
And want the aid of Goff.
Nick Hayes and Noal are fitting keys
To lock the County Jail;
The one who wins election day
Can take the other's bail.

And they all work but Flammer;
He sits at home all day,
With his feet upon his hammer,
Not caring what they say.

GET FORMER BELMONT BUTLER

Detectives Arrest Him for Cashing Bad Checks—He's in the Rogues' Gallery.

John Reid, once the butler of O. H. P. Belmont, was arrested yesterday as he was cashing a check in payment for some purchases at a cut glass store in Twenty-second Street. The purported signature on the check was that of Albert P. Mitchell. Both Mr. Belmont and Mr. Mitchell declared last night that they would prosecute the man for alleged forgeries.

A few days ago, according to the detectives, the prisoner dropped into a haberdasher's on Broadway and ordered an automobile coat sent to Mr. Belmont, taking the change from a $30 check. Mr. Belmont was mystified at finding an automobile coat added to his wardrobe. When the check turned up among his vouchers he set the police at work.

According to the records of the Detective Bureau Reid is No. 10,755 in the Rogues' Gallery and has served three sentences for petty forgeries.

POSTAL CASHIER ARRESTED.

St. Louis Employe Is Said to Have Embezzled $9,000.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 21.—Francis B. Runder, cashier of the St. Louis Post Office, was arrested this afternoon by Post Office Inspectors J. L. Stice and John D. Sullivan, following the discovery of a shortage of $9,000 in his accounts. It is said that Runder admitted to the Inspectors that he was responsible for the shortage, but said he did not know what had become of the money.

Runder was suspended by Postmaster Wyman prior to his arrest. He has been employed in the Post Office for twenty-six years, the latter nine of which he has been cashier. Runder was under bond for $100,000. It is said the surety company which issued the bond instituted the inquiry.

"Even Unto the Third Generation"

THE KNABE PIANO of to-day is being manufactured under the direct supervision of the third generation of the house of Knabe—men who are "to the manor born" in piano manufacture, and who know by heritage and practical education every detail of piano construction.

Isn't it "worth while" to own an instrument that has seventy or more years of unbroken piano prestige behind it—a distinction enjoyed only by the Knabe?

To buy a Knabe is to own the world's best piano.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS

Weil, Loeb & Guttman of Chicago have been appointed Illinois general agents of the General Accident Company.

The Georgia Home Insurance Company has been licensed to transact a fire insurance business in the State of Pennsylvania, and Brown & Smythe have been designated as its Philadelphia agents.

The Ohio State Insurance Department has issued a license to the Rossia Insurance Company of St. Petersburg.

The Fire Underwriters' Association of the Northwest has elected these officers for the ensuing year: President—Robert S. Odell off Chicago; Vice President—D. W. Andrews of Lansing, Mich.; Secretary—N. E. Briggs of Chicago; Treasurer—W. R. Townley of Chicago.

The new step in the manner of insuring business property adopted by the Milwaukee Board of Fire Underwriters is described by George H. Russell, Vice President of the board, as follows: "A resolution has been adopted by which the rates of insurance on all mercantile and office buildings, when written for a term of three years, will be the price of two annual premiums. Instead of two and one-half, as at present. A building which has heretofore been rated at 1 per cent. per year, or 2½ per cent. for three years, will now be rated at 2 per cent. for three years. The board also waived all charges for 'extras,' such as the storage of gasoline and fireworks, in buildings, which will mean that, under proper conditions, gasoline for automobiles may be kept on the premises of the insured without being charged as extra."

NEW BURLINGTON LINE.

Will Reach Salt Lake City—Consternation in Union Pacific.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Oct. 21.—Official announcement was made to-day by General Manager Holdredge that the Burlington Railroad had already begun the construction of a line to Salt Lake City, and that numerous feeders would be built, making a total of more than 1,000 miles of new line.

The announcement created consternation in rival headquarters, and Union Pacific officials left here to-night on a special train for San Francisco to confer with Harriman when he lands from Japan next week.

Omaha railroad men say the Burlington new line will cause a general shake-up in Western railroads, and that 2,500 miles of road building will be the result.

BIG COLLEGE ELEVENS PLAY EXCITING GAMES

Columbia Averts Defeat by Field Goal in Closing Play.

PENN WINS BY TWO POINTS

West Point Loses to Harvard on a Fumble — Lafayette Scores on Tigers—Yale's Small Total.

Yesterday more than fulfilled its promise of exciting games on the gridiron. Two of the big teams escaped defeat only by the narrowest of margins. Two won by mighty small scores, and another was scored on by a field goal.

Columbia played a tie game with Amherst, and was saved from defeat only by kicking a field goal in the closing play of the match. It was the smallest kind of a hole for the Blue and White to crawl out of and the hardest kind of luck for the Amherst boys, who clearly outplayed the Morningside eleven after the first ten minutes' play.

Pennsylvania beat Brown by the margin of only two points. This was a safety made by Brown in the first half, the only score made. In the second period of play each team added a touch-down and a goal, making the safety the deciding factor in turning the scale in Pennsylvania's favor.

West Point played Harvard to a standstill. In the first half the Crimson team was twice forced to defend against attempts at field goal after the soldiers had carried the ball almost to the Harvard goal line. Both attempts failed, and the half ended with no score. The Crimson made a single touch-down in the second half, and this came when West Point touched a punt that rolled over their goal line, where a Harvard man fell on it. A second score of a similar nature was averted by West Point holding for downs on their own goal line after giving the Cambridge team the ball fifteen yards from the goal.

After surprising and delighting their following by running up a total of 17 points in the first half against Lafayette, Princeton gave Nassau men a scare by allowing Shuster to kick a goal from the field, while Princeton scored a single touch-down.

Yale made only 12 points against State College, their vaunted attack failing to crush as expected. The line only held its own against the visitors. Cornell did well against the heavy Western University of Pennsylvania team, and made about the best showing of the day.

The scores of the important games were:

Columbia, 10; Amherst, 10.
Pennsylvania, 8; Brown, 6.
Harvard, 6; West Point, 0.
Yale, 12; State College, 0.
Princeton, 22; Lafayette, 4.
Cornell, 30; Western University of Pennsylvania, 0.
Annapolis, 38; North Carolina, 0.
Carlisle Indians, 36; Dickinson, 0.

SCHULTZ SAVES COLUMBIA.

Kicks Sensational Goal on Closing Play and Ties Amherst's Score.

A punt, a fumble, a substitution, and a drop kick enabled Columbia to turn defeat into a tie score in the last minute of play in the game at American League Park yesterday afternoon in the game with Amherst. The New England collegians had outplayed the Blue and White eleven during the larger part of the forty-five minutes actual play agreed upon. The visitors had scored ten points to Columbia's six and appeared to have the game in hand when they kicked the ball to Columbia's five-yard line with three minutes to play. Vainly the Morningside collegians tried to gain by trick plays. The first two or three carried the leather forward till it reached the thirty-five-yard line, where they were forced to punt to save losing the ball on downs. When despair was deepest in the New York men's breasts a heaven-sent opportunity was offered which they made the most of.

They kicked to Amherst's twenty-five-yard line with less than a minute to play. The ball was handled cleanly, but on the next play Shattuck fumbled and the ball was again Columbia's, twenty yards from the goal. There was but fifteen seconds to play and a hurried consultation was held. Collins had replaced Donnovan at quarter back on the Blue and White team less than two minutes before, but he was now withdrawn and Schultz sent into the game for the final attempt to score. The ball lay on the twenty-yard line at a difficult angle from the goal posts and the attempted field goal intended looked hopeless even to those who had faith in the clever kicker's undoubted skill. He settled his men into position and took his place deliberately before Capt. Fisher signalled the end of the time asked for.

The ball came back clean into the little fellow's hands and dropped straight and quickly. His foot swung forward and struck it and it rose and hovered in the air in the direction of the posts. The wind was blowing across the field against it and there was an instant's intaking of breath as it met the gust. But it settled to its course and fell just past the posts and clean between them.

In an instant pandemonium reigned, as the Columbia men, lifted from the depths to the tallest heights of exultation, gave expression to a gigantic shout. Then they danced madly with joy, and as the referee's whistle sounded the end of the game, immediately swarmed on the field to seize the players and bear them off, and then begin a characteristic snake dance over the trodden sward.

It was a gallant effort and merited its success, but it was a hard game for Amherst to lose, and the sympathy of the impartial spectator went out to the Yankees. They were met at the start of the game by a rejuvenated Columbia team, fast and snappy and well directed in its play, quick in offense, and low and effective in defense—in short, a team infused with just the spirit the accession of new blood and the election of a new leader was expected to inspire. A bad pass for a try for goal from the field, which gave Columbia the ball in midfield, was just the tonic needed to send the Blue and White crashing through the line for steady gains that resulted in a touch-down and goal.

In the latter part of the half Amherst found itself, and Columbia weakened. The visitors outplayed the Morningside collegians, but could not take the pigskin over the line. In the second half, however, there was a different story to tell. They rushed the ball back from the kick-off past midfield, and kicked to Columbia's thirty-yard line. Here they held and forced Fisher to punt, and R. Crook was through on him like a shot, and right in front of the ball as it left the Columbia Captain's foot. The thud resounded as the ball rebounded toward the Blue and White goal. Shattuck was on it, and, giving it another kick, sent it across the line. Fisher managed to prevent his falling on it there, but R. Crook again following secured the pigskin for a touch-down.

There was a nerve-racking tension as the ball was kicked out, and Hubbard made a splendid fair catch of the difficult punt. This he followed by kicking the goal and tying the score.

It spelt doom to Columbia, for her team was demoralizing fast. Right through the Amherst backs rushed the ball, till it reached the ten-yard line. Held in check there for downs, and sent back to midfield by a kick, the Amherst boys came on again. A mistaken signal and a fumble checked them again on the fifteen-yard line, and Shattuck dropped back to try a field goal right in front of the posts. He put the ball through clean, and apparently won the game.

It was all Amherst on resuming play. Shattuck made a magnificent run from the kick-off back past midfield. Then came the kick to Columbia's five-yard line as time was drawing to a close, and the game looked safe. But the Amherst leader took one chance too many, and the fumble on the return kick made the chance for Columbia to save an otherwise hopelessly lost game. The teams lined up:

Columbia, 10.	Positions.	Amherst, 10.
Duden	Left tackle	Kilbourne
Ross	Left guard	Bryant
Algeltinger	Centre	Gildersleeve
Davis, Von Saltza	Right guard	Osborne
Brown	Right tackle	Leadbetter
Enos, Donnovan, Collins	Right end	Pritty
Schultz, Armstrong	Quarter back	Shattuck
Lindo, Helmrich	Left half back	Hubbard
Fisher, Fisher	Right half back	F. Crook
Ecobeverria	Full back	Lewis

PENNSYLVANIA, 8; BROWN, 6.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 21.—Pennsylvania to-day defeated Brown University by the score of 8 to 6. The score does not correctly show the relative strength of the two elevens, as Pennsylvania should have scored at least three touch-downs, while Brown should not have crossed the Pennsylvania goal. In the first half Pennsylvania twice had the ball on the Providence boys' three-yard line. Once they lost it on a fumble and again on account of the runner slipping on the soft ground.

Brown's touch-down was made just as time expired for the call of the game, but as the play began before time was actually up the score was allowed. A few seconds before the call of time for the second half, when the ball was within a few feet of Brown's goal, Torrey made a bad pass. The ball rolled back of the Brown line and Dennie was on it like a flash. He darted down the field, and when he had crossed the Pennsylvania goal not a man on the local eleven was within striking distance.

Pennsylvania's safety was made on a peculiar play. The home eleven had carried the ball to within three yards of Brown's goal, when Lamson slipped and Brown got the ball. Adams sent a high spiral into the air and the wind carried the ball back of his own goal, Welkert falling on it for a safety. Pennsylvania's only touch-down was made through the excellent work of Folwell. He broke through and blocked the kick and securing the ball ran thirty yards for a touch-down. Brown played a good game, but was slow in charging, while Pennsylvania fumbled badly. The line-up:

Pennsylvania.	Position.	Brown.
Rooke	Left tackle	Kirley
Draper	Left guard	West'rv'lt, Fletcher
Torrey	Centre	Conklin
Robinson	Right guard	Thomas
Lamson	Right tackle	Hazard, M'Gregor
Scarlett	Right end	Russ
Stevenson	Quarter back	Schwarz, Rackle
Sheble	Left half back	Welkert, Chase
Greene	Right half back	Curtis, Mayhew
Folwell	Full back	Adams, Ehmke

Touch-downs—Folwell, Dennie. Safety—Welkert. Goals from touch-downs—Sheble, Russ. Referee—Mr. Corbin, Yale. Umpire—Mr. Barclay, Lafayette. Linesman—Mr. McCloskey, Pennsylvania. Time of halves—Twenty-five and twenty minutes.

YALE, 12; PENN. STATE, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 21.—Yale was outplayed by Penn. State in every point in the first half to-day and barely won the game by a score of 12 to 0. The Yale defense was very weak and for a third of the entire game seemed unable to solve the slow moving Penn attack on centre and guard, interspersed with fake kicks. Flanders, Erwin, and Bigelow were like paper men a large part of the first half, and the secondary defense was not strong enough to stem the tide of Penn State's heavy onslaughts. Only careless handling of the ball prevented the visitors from scoring.

When Yale's back field took the offense their play was savage and dug long distances out of the strong Penn State line. Both touch-downs were earned by Yale through hard playing. The Yale ends were rarely in evidence when needed, and Hutchinson alone once saved Yale from being scored against. When Jones went in at quarter Yale's playing picked up and Penn State was outclassed at the end of the game.

The Yale team is not downcast by the 108 yards plugged out by Penn State, as it was the first real practice in defense Yale has had. Twice McGee of Penn State was within an ace of scoring a goal from field and Yale was not sure of a clean slate until the whistle blew. Miller and McGee made runs of twenty-five yards each for Penn State.

In the first half Shevlin ran forty yards from a fumble, and Veeder scored for Yale on the next play. Later McGee ran twenty-five yards for Penn and then tried a goal from field from Yale's forty-yard line but failed. Penn then carried the ball to Yale's twenty-five-yard line, where McGee again failed to kick a goal. The half ended 6 to 0 for Yale, but with Yale evidently on the run.

In the second half Penn State fooled Yale again on fake kicking, but Yale's battering attack and a long run by Turner finally scored a second touch-down. Line-up:

Yale, 12.	Position.	Penn State, 0.
Forbes, Erwin	Left tackle	Wray
Hockenberger	Left guard	Kunkle
Flanders, Smith	Centre	Dunn
Tripp	Right guard	Putnam
Bigelow	Right tackle	Gottwalls
Shevlin, Hutchinson	Right end	Campbell
Jones	Quarter back	Moorehead
Veeder	Left half back	Yeckley
Morse	Right half back	Miller
Flinn, Levine	Full back	McGee

Touch-downs—Veeder, 2. Goals from touch-downs—Veeder, 2. Referee—Dr. Hammond. Umpire—T. B. Hull. Timer—Sidney Coe. Time of halves—Twenty-five and twenty minutes. Attendance—2,000.

PRINCETON, 22; LAFAYETTE, 4.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 21.—Princeton triumphed over Lafayette this afternoon by the score of 22 to 4 in a game which might have been easily mistaken for a championship contest from the fierceness of the play on both sides. The score fails to indicate the comparative strength of the teams, as the Eastonians outplayed the Tigers during the second half and humiliated them time after time by holding them for downs. With the ball near the centre of the field Bard started off with his run outside of tackle and, assisted by Daub and McCormick, the ball was rushed down the field with a snap, when Daub took it through left tackle for a touch-down after eight minutes of play. Tooker failed to kick the goal. The Tigers pushed down to the twenty-yard line, but lost out on a fumble. Cooper made two yards when the ball was fumbled three times consecutively, but finally went into Daub's possession on the fifteen-yard line. Lafayette held well, but McCormick was finally pushed over for the second score. Tooker again failed on his goal kick. After Newberry and McAvoy had been instrumental in making the distance twice, the ball was punted to Bard on the forty-yard line. It was advanced twenty-three yards on alternate runs. Dillon tried a quarter-back kick, and the ball rolled back of the line, but due to Schuster's ignorance in not falling on it, Bard rushed up and pounced on the leather for a touch-down. Cooney kicked the goal. The first half ended 16 to 0.

Early in the second half Schuster got the ball within reach of the goal, but on his drop kick McCormick rushed through and blocked it. Princeton was held for downs, and after McCaa had made five yards Shuster performed his wonderful feat from the forty-eight-yard line and made Lafayette's only score. During the rest of that half the ball changed hands several times, but Lafayette gained more ground. Five minutes before the time was called Bard and Munn carried the ball thirty-five yards, when Cooney went over for a touch-down and kicked the goal. The line-up:

Lafayette, 4.	Position.	Princeton, 22.
Snook, Coloton	Left end	Brasher, Vaughan
Dowd	Left guard	H. Dillon, Carothers,
Hoskins	Centre	J. Waller
Logan, Roger	Right guard	Rafferty
Newberry	Right tackle	Phillips
Thomas	Right end	Tooker, Fryer
Shuster, Dietrich	Quarter back	E. Dillon, Tenney
Wack, McCaa	Left half back	Bard, Simons
Hall, Wasmund	Right half back	Daub, Munn
McAvoy	Full back	McCormick, Otis

Touch-downs—Daub, McCormick, Bard, Cooney. Goals from touch-downs—Tooker, Cooney. Goals missed—Tooker, 2. Umpire—Mr. Williams. Referee—Mr. McCracken, Pennsylvania. Linesmen—Messrs. Stannard and Koerber. Time of halves—Thirty minutes. Attendance—5,000.

CORNELL, 30; W. U. P., 0.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Oct. 21.—By defeating the Western University of Pennsylvania 30 to 0 to-day Cornell proved that she has the best football team in years. The Allegheny University sent up the most formidable eleven that Cornell has faced this season. They held the Ithacans to a single score in the first half, but were overrun in the second by fast play.

Cornell started off with a kicking game. The visitors got the ball and rushed it to the Ithacans' 42-yard line before being held for downs. This was the furthest, however, they got in Cornell's territory. By alternating Halliday and Thompson, Cornell then carried it down for a touch-down as time was called.

In the second half the Ithacans surprised themselves with their own strength. A touch-down came almost every five minutes. Cornell varied the play constantly. Earle made two long runs. Rice distinguished himself with a quarter back run. The whole eleven played brilliantly. Line-up:

Cornell, 30.	Position.	W. U. of P., 0.
Schildmiller, Rhoadhouse	Left end	East
Downes	Left guard	Edgar, Yielding, Miller
Hodge, Wilder	Centre	McKean
Furman	Right guard	Waddill
Costello, Dann	Right tackle	Turner
Van Orman	Right end	Perry
Pollak, Rice	Quarter back	Ritchie
Walder, Earle, Martin	Left half back	Griggis
Gibson	Right half back	Schmidt
Halliday, Folger	Full back	Banbury, Mehl

WEST POINT'S FUMBLE GIVES HARVARD VICTORY

Cambridge Men Score Touch-Down on Failure to Catch Punt.

CADETS OUTPLAY CRIMSON

Army Lads Carry Ball Close to Opponents' Line, But Miss Three Tries for Field Goal.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Oct. 21.—Four thousand persons watched the defeat of West Point to-day by a score of 6 to 0. The cadets proved the stronger team and played the Cambridge boys to a standstill all through the game. Harvard succeeded in scoring only by getting a fumbled kick which rolled over the goal line.

The visitors gained much ground by blocking drop kicks and getting fumbles. They had a second chance to score, getting a fumbled kick near West Point's goal line, but the cadets rallied and took the ball away on their four-yard line.

The game was conspicuous for its long runs by Beavers for West Point and for the good defensive work of Capt. Gillespie. Brill and Knowlton did good work for Harvard, both on defense and offense. Torney was strong for West Point.

Harvard used a tandem play which was rather slow and did not gain much ground. West Point used a line shift which made ground fairly well. There was a strong wind blowing up the field, and West Point took advantage of it in the first half, after winning the toss. Harvard made good use of it in the second half by kicking off to West Point's five-yard line. Beavers then punted sixty yards. After several exchanges of punts, Harvard got the ball on West Point's 25-yard line, and started her offense, with Brill back. She carried it 15 yards, and then had to surrender it to West Point on the 10-yard line. Beavers kicked to Harvard's 25-yard line, and Gillespie brought Nichols down fiercely.

Harvard carried the ball to her 50-yard line and lost it on downs. Christy then went through for 20 yards, but fell, losing a chance to score. West Point then lost the ball on the 30-yard line. After Harvard carried it back to the centre of the field, Beavers rounded right end for 40 yards, but the Crimson held on their 15-yard line, and West Point tried and missed a field goal.

After a kick-out by Harvard, Beavers again circled the end for 40 yards, but the ball was brought back and a penalty given. This ended the first half.

In the second half Harvard had the wind and used it to good advantage by kicking. Beavers kicked off for West Point across their goal line. After the return West Point lost the ball, and after several plays Harvard kicked. Hill fumbled the kick and McDonald got it for Harvard, scoring a touch-down. White kicked the goal.

West Point got the ball on Harvard's 40-yard line shortly after, but fumbled, and Harvard kicked. Beavers again skirted right end for 25 yards, and from this point tried for field goal. The kick was blocked. Three plays brought it back, and Beavers again tried for goal from the 50-yard line. Again the kick was blocked, and Harvard secured the ball.

The rest of the half was spent in West Point territory. A fumbled kick gave Harvard the ball on West Point's 25-yard line. She carried the ball to the 4-yard line, then lost it on downs. Thereafter neither side came near scoring. Time was called with the ball at the centre of the field. Line-up:

West Point, 0.	Position.	Harvard, 6.
Wilhelm	Left end	O'Brien, Bartels
Erwin, Sultan	Left tackle	Brill
Weeks	Left guard	Parker, Burr
Abraham	Centre	White
Christy	Right guard	Kersburg
Mettler	Right tackle	Mont'g'ry, Spears, Fultz
Gillespie	Right end	McDonald
Garry	Quarter back	Newhall
Hill	Right half back	Nesmith
Beavers	Left half back	Leonard
Torney	Full back	Knowlton

ANNAPOLIS, 38; N. CAROLINA, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 21.—The midshipmen played another fast game to-day, and won from the eleven of the University of North Carolina by the score of 38 to 0 in two twenty-minute halves. In the first half short-line plays were used, and from them Doherty scored two touch-downs. This pounding took a great deal of the life out of the visitors, and in the second half wide end runs made long and frequent gains.

Decker, who went in as quarter in place of Norton, made several brilliant runs. He would easily hold the place but for Norton's drop kicking. Bernard made the longest single run of the game for seventy yards, while Spencer, by several fine sprints and his steady breaks outside tackle, scored the greatest total of yards. Line-up:

Navy, 38.	Position.	U. of N. C., 0.
Welsch, Strowther, Piersol	Left end	Townsend
McKinney	Left tackle	Aberneath
O'Brien	Left guard	Gardner
Causey, Res	Centre	Parker

Grady, Woodworth	Right tackle	Story
Daugue, Norton, Decker	Right end	Wright
Needham, Spencer	Quarter back	Sadler
Jones, Doherty	Left half back	Winburne
Bernard	Right half back	Snipes
Ghormley, Smith	Full back	Robertson

Referee—Dr. Herbert Whitehurst, University of Maryland. Umpire—Gresham Poe, Princeton. Touchdowns—Ghormley, (3,) Doherty, (2,) Spencer, Grady. Goals from touch-downs—Norton, 8. Time of halves—Twenty minutes.

CARLISLE, 36; DICKINSON, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Oct. 21.—The Carlisle Indians defeated Dickinson College here this afternoon by the score of 36 to 0. The game was replete with interest because of sensational plays, among which were several long runs by Archiquette and Salters and successful hurdles by the latter. The redskins first scored as a result of a Dickinson fumble. The Dickinson eleven lost its grip as the result of their fumble, but braced up in the middle of the game. Kicking was a feature of the game, and both sides benefited by a strong wind. Davis, Dickinson's Captain, failed to kick a goal from the field five times in the first half. On the strength of to-day's game the redskins expect to defeat Penn next Saturday. The line-up:

Carlisle, 36.	Position.	Dickinson, 0.
Bowen	Left tackle	Parvis
Dillon, Scott	Left guard	Messner
Scott, Hunt	Centre	Hoffman
Laroque	Right guard	Harry
Exendine	Right tackle	Davis
Lubo, A. Libby	Right end	Salters
Mt. Pleasant, Sheldon	Quarter back	Simpson
Albanez, Archiquette	Left half back	Robinson, McIntyre
Charles	Right half back	Klingstine
Little Boy, Dubois	Full back	Vlebahm

Touch-downs—Sheldon, Archiquette, Albanez, Dubois, Exendine. Goals from touch-down—Dillon, (8,) Mount Pleasant. Referee—Dr. Smith, Princeton. Umpire—Mr. Goodchild, Lafayette. Linesman—Mr. Roderick, University of Pennsylvania. Time of halves—Twenty-five and twenty-two and a half minutes.

DARTMOUTH, 24; WILLIAMS, 0.

HANOVER, N. H., Oct. 21.—Dartmouth had no difficulty in defeating Williams this afternoon 24 to 0. They scored once in the first half and added three touch-downs and a safety in the second. Williams was unable to get nearer than the Dartmouth fifty-yard line for a score.

Dartmouth's team work was fair, Rich and Herr making consistent gains. The Williams team as a whole was weak. Line-up:

Dartmouth, 24.	Position.	Williams, 0.
Church, Stearns	Left end	Elder
McDonald, Griffin	Left guard	Harter, Campbell,
Dillingham	Centre	Loomis

Blatherwicks	Left half back	D. Brown
Herr, Rix, Rich	Right half back	A. M. Brown
Greenwood	Full back	Waters, Robb

Touch-downs—Rich, 3; Herr. Goals from touch-downs—J. Glaze, 2. Safety—Waters. Umpire—Mr. Cloudman, Bowdoin. Referee—Mr. Pendleton, Bowdoin. Time—Twenty-five and twenty minute halves.

WESLEYAN, 31; N. Y. U., 0.

Wesleyan's team, outweighing New York University fifteen pounds to a man, scored a decisive victory on Ohio Field yesterday by a score of 31 to 0. New York held the Middletown team to two touch-downs in the first half, but the withdrawal of several players on account of injuries weakened the home team and allowed Wesleyan to score four times in the second.

The Middletown players opened the game with a vigorous assault on the New Yorkers' line. After ten minutes' playing Dearborn crossed the line, the try for goal was missed. After a succession of short runs Bailey scored the second touch-down on a delayed pass, Hampson missing the goal. Wesleyan demoralized New York in the second half. Several players on the latter team were injured and forced to retire from the game. With a weakened team New York could offer little resistance to Wesleyan's attack, and the latter added 21 points to their score. The line-up:

Wesleyan, 31.	Position.	New York, 0.
Finley	Left end	Connell, Perry
North	Left tackle	Jennings
Doe	Centre	Rabenold
Taylor	Right guard	Kaefer
Dearborn, Reiter	Right tackle	Swartz, Van Horne
Cunningham	Right end	Wylie
Van Surdam	Quarter back	Rust, Wilson
Gildersleeve, Hampson	Left half back	Dougherty, Tietjen, Swartz
Munson	Right half back	Mowen
Woodhead, Bailey	Full back	Cragin, Tietjen

SYRACUSE, 11; COLGATE, 5.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Oct. 21.—In one of the best games of football ever seen in this city the Syracuse University football team defeated the Colgate University football team by the score of 11 to 5 to-day.

Within a minute after the game had started Capt. Tucker of the Syracuse team broke through the Colgate line and blocked Runge's punt. Rutherford picked up the ball and ran ten yards for a touch-down. This was the only score in the first half.

In the second half of the game the Syracuse played Colgate off her feet. The first touch-down in this part of the game came after about fifteen minutes of play, Syracuse working the ball up to within a foot of the Colgate line from the centre of the field, and then losing it there, and then repeating the trick and scoring. Colgate scored toward the end of the half. Castleman and Runge for Colgate and Stimson, Stein, and Harwood for Syracuse were the stars of the game.

YALE FRESHMEN, 5; ST. PAUL, 0.

The Yale freshmen yesterday defeated the St. Paul School at Garden City by the score of 5 to 0. Neither team scored in the first half, although the boys' school had the ball on Yale's three-yard line but lost it on downs. After ten minutes' play in the second period, Bowman was pushed over the line for a touch-down for Yale. The line-up:

Yale Freshmen, 5.	Positions.	St. Paul, 0.
Leggett	Left end	Waters
Pierce	Left tackle	Scott
Raymond	Left guard	Pratt
Riddle	Centre	Hunt
Frankel	Right guard	Knowles
Clark	Right tackle	Wheaton
Burch	Right end	Devia
Soper	Quarter back	Middleton
Elliott	Left half back	Boggs
Rose	Right half back	Woodruff

Touch-down—Bowman. Referee—Mr. Weller.

PRINCETON, '09, 12; H. S. OF C., 0.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 21.—The Princeton freshmen defeated the New York High School of Commerce this afternoon in a well-played game by the score of 12 to 6. Although considerably outweighted, the freshmen played a much more aggressive game than their opponents and had little difficulty in scoring a touch-down in each half. Purves and Osborn played the best game for the freshmen. Line-up:

Princeton, 12.	Position.	Commerce, 0.
Caldwell	Centre	Adams
Stuart	Right guard	Schermann
Mackey	Right tackle	Ware
Johnson	Right end	Sommell

WEST'S FIRST BIG GAME.

Chicago Beats Wisconsin Through Eckersall's Goal from the Field.

MADISON, Wis., Oct. 21.—Chicago beat Wisconsin to-day in the first big game of the year through the magnificent playing of Eckersall at quarter back more than through any other thing. Again and again the wonderful player saved the ball for the visitors when they were held in check by the Badgers by his remarkable quarter back running. Still Chicago could not take the ball across the goal line. Three times in the first half and as often in the second they brought the pigskin within striking distance of the goal, only to lose it on downs or by missed tries at field goals. The first half ended without a score. In the second with the ball twice held on Wisconsin's fifteen-yard line, Eckersall dropped back for another try at goal and dropped neatly between the posts for four points and a victory.

Wisconsin threatened Chicago's goal almost as often as the visitors did the Badgers. Twice in the first half they carried the ball to the twenty-yard line and lost it on downs, and after Eckersall scored they literally tore the Chicago line to ribbons in a mad effort to tally a touch-down and turn the tide of defeat to victory, but once more they lost it on the twenty-yard line, lacking an inch of the needed five yards. It was a dying effort.

It was Eckersall's generalship quite as much as his great play that was responsible for the victory. On defense he showed as brilliantly as in attack. Capt. Catlin of Chicago was also in every play, protecting his end of the line beautifully, and time and again by his sure tackling preventing long gains by the Wisconsin backs.

On straight football the Wisconsin team excelled. Chicago's mass-on tackle, heretofore a sure ground gainer, was broken up as a rule with small gain, Bertke and Johnson, the Wisconsin tackles, outplaying Hill and Badenock. The struggle was fierce throughout. It was football, clean, hard; each man playing to the last ounce. Little fumbling was done. Chicago used no substitutes, and Wisconsin only two. Wisconsin's line was apparently the better, the team as a whole a little better balanced. Chicago's back field excelled Wisconsin's. Line-up:

BLIND TEAM PLAYS WELL.

Keeps Opponents from Scoring in Football Game at Louisville.

Special to The New York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Oct. 21.—The splendid team work of the blind school's football squad kept the Manual Training High School freshmen from scoring in the game to-day and closed the two halves of fifteen and twenty minutes each with a fine record. In the first half, with only two minutes to play, the blind boys took the ball on downs, and by a mass play on the left tackle, sent their totally blind right guard through for twenty yards, placing the ball on the freshmen's one-yard line. The blind team then fumbled the ball on the next down and the half ended with freshmen's ball on their one-yard line. The second half ended with the ball in the possession of the blind boys and on the freshmen's fifteen-yard line. The score was nothing to nothing.

'CHASES AT MORRIS PARK PROVIDE GREAT SPORT

Society and the Hunt Set Out in Full Force.

RACES PLEASE THE CROWD

Gentlemen Riders Strongly in Evidence—Clark Cup Won by Crow Wing from Radnor Hunt.

It speaks well for the future of steeplechase meetings in and near New York that yesterday, when the regular Jamaica meeting was in progress and a cold northwest wind made it not precisely the most comfortable day out of doors, no less than 5,000 persons went to Morris Park to attend the first day of the first meeting of the United Hunts Racing Association. It seemed a little like old times to hear the bugle in the paddock and from the judges' stand calling the horses to the post, and many an old racegoer, meeting a friend in the clubhouse or on the lawn, remarked:

"Doesn't it seem good to be back at Morris Park."

It was a good day's sport that rewarded the devotees of steeplechasing who journeyed up into the Bronx. The programme included six races, as of old, four of them through the field and over the jumps and two of them on the flat, though the conditions of even the flat races were framed to suit the weight-carrying horses.

Of course the horsey and hunting contingents of New York society were out in full force, inasmuch as it was largely due to the efforts of men attached in one way or another to these interests that the meeting was arranged. They backed up their own venture enthusiastically, and the result was that the clubhouse, while not, of course, as well filled as on the big days of the former Morris Park, was yet as well tenanted as on many of the off days under the regime of the Westchester Racing Association.

At least fifty automobiles were drawn up behind the clubhouse, while many more awaited their owners outside the grounds. A goodly number drove to the track in their own traps, while half a dozen coaches rolled in to the sound of the mellow horn. Alfred G. Vanderbilt drove the Venture, and with him came Mrs. J. L. Kernochan, Mrs. Smith Hadden, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Guinness, Ralph N. Ellis, Munson Morris, Searle Barclay, and Samuel Willetts. Other coaches, which added to the picturesqueness of the occasion by their presence, were those of Edward Clarkson Potter, Thomas Maitland, who drove down from Rye; Paul G. Thebaud, and Squadron A, with R. L. Lawrence acting as whip.

A complete list of the persons seen in the clubhouse inclosure would include the names of most of the people prominent in the hunting contingent of society. Among them were Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont, Miss Evelyn Parsons, Mrs. J. Stevens Ulman, Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., Miss Nora Iselin, Mrs. J. S. Stevens, Mrs. R. Livingston Beeckman, Sir George and Lady Murray, Peter Gerry, Robert Gerry, Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Potter, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Potter, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Sands, E. C. La Montagne, Mr. and Mrs. O. W. Bird, Richard Peters, Miss Fellowes, Mrs. Maxwell Stevenson, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Widener, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Carman, Alfonse de Navarro, J. R. Townsend, Edmond Randolph, and Morton W. Smith.

The crowd was a bit slow in arriving, but it kept coming until after the third race had been run, and by that time had assumed sufficient proportions to make a considerable impression even upon the huge Morris Park grand stand. The officials of the United Hunts Association were obviously much encouraged by the way in which their venture was received.

"I think it is a good beginning—a very good beginning," said Perry Belmont, President of the association. The second day of the meeting will be next Wednesday, and the third and last next Saturday. If the public support of the venture carries out the promise of the first day, it seems more than likely that steeplechase meetings will be held regularly hereabout, though they may not be held at Morris Park. The famous old race course was in fine condition yesterday, and many a racegoer audibly lamented its abandonment by the Westchester Association.

There was a strong predominance of the amateur sporting spirit in the day's racing. In the first place, there were many gentlemen riders seen in the saddle. Not a race, in fact, was run, but several of them appeared to ride, and in the Clark Cup, which was the feature of the day, all the riders were amateurs from various hunt clubs. When the field for the first race went to the post a good many persons were surprised to see it headed by a scarlet-coated rider on a fine, big upstanding hunter, who was not entered in the race. The rider was a whip in the uniform of the Orange County Hunt Club, and he repeated this little formality before every race.

Heavy weights and long distances ruled the card. Not a horse carried less than 140 pounds, and the only race under two miles was the opening five-furlong dash. None of the distances was exactly measured, but each appeared on the programme as "about" such and such a distance. Consequently no time was taken for any race, and all the races were started without a barrier, even those on the flat.

Out of twelve entries for the Clark Cup, a steeplechase for bona-fide hunters, five years old and over, all but three started. The cup was the gift of F. Ambrose Clark, who had the misfortune to break his collarbone in the second race on the card, the Pelham Steeplechase. Mr. Clark was riding Rory O'Moore, who fell at the very first jump, pitching his rider heavily on his shoulder. Mr. Clark was uninjured save for the fracture of the collarbone, and with his arm in a sling watched the other races from the clubhouse. His chief regret seemed to be that his injury kept him from riding in the later races of the afternoon.

All the starters for the Clark Cup were required by the conditions of the race to be ridden by members of the hunts from which they were entered, and six different clubs sent entries to the post. The hunting set had sized up the chances of the various entries to such a nicety that at post time R. A. Strawbridge's black gelding Crow Wing, from the Radnor Hunt, was a decided favorite at 3 to 1 and even money for the place. Crow Wing justified the confidence reposed in him by his backers by running an exceptionally strong race through the rather heavy going. He was away with the leaders, and Mr. Devereux soon sent him to the front, drawing steadily away to finish an easy winner by about fifteen lengths. Liffey Bank, under a well-judged ride from Mr. Evans, trailed in next to last place for about two miles, and then came with such a fine rush that he landed the place in a whipping finish from Owaissa.

Bahsquada was the first to fall, coming to grief at the post-and-rail fence at the top of the hill. Erie fell heavily at the stone wall in front of the stand on the second round, pitching Mr. Page on his head, but doing him no damage of consequence. Cariboo, too, went down, and Squire Gray refused the first jump.

"Mr. Cotton" produced one of the good things of the day in the Country Club Steeplechase, when he sent to the post his chestnut gelding Knight of Elway. The talent which did business with the ten books under the stand had made Dupont the favorite at 6 to 5, largely on account of the fact that "Nat" Ray had the mount, but Knight of Elway lay back in fifth place half the journey, then went easily to the front and was never headed thereafter, winning as he pleased from Pure Pepper, which came fast at the end and got the place from the favorite.

It was a day of long shots, Garterknot, at 8 to 1, making only a gallop of it in the Pelham Steeplechase, winning with ease from Caloorahatchee, the 8-to-5 favorite, and Edna Tanner, at the same long odds, taking the five-furlong sprint over the flat with which the day's sport opened. Edna Tanner was ridden and is owned by Allan Pinkerton, son of "Bob" Pinkerton.

The get-away race was a two-mile affair on the flat, each of the four starters carrying 160 pounds. Lipton, the 3-to-5 favorite, was much the best, but Mr. Martin rode him as if the race were a six-furlong sprint, with the result that at the end he had nothing left, and Kumshaw, after a hard drive down the stretch, drew away and won by five lengths. Summaries follow:

Rancho Del Paso Catalogue.

The catalogue for the largest sale of thoroughbred horses ever held, the J. B. Haggin offering of the Rancho del Paso breeding stock, for the final dispersal of that great establishment, has been issued. The catalogue, a book of 600 pages, contains tabulated pedigrees of the entire offering of stallions and brood mares, indexed in alphabetical order and with an extra index in the same arrangement of the sires of mares. Twenty-six stallions are catalogued, with extended pedigrees, these including the great English horse Watercress, sire of Waterboy, Watercolor, and other notable animals; Star Ruby, sire of the Suburban winner Africander; the English Derby horse St. Gatien, which ran a dead heat with Harvester for that great event; the Suburban winner Montana; Glenheim, brother to Handsome and half-brother to Hastings and Ferrier; Golden Garter, Bassetlaw, Indio, and Gerolstein. The mares to be sold at the sale, which will continue through four days in early December, are 548 in number.

HEAD FINISHES RULE AT THE JAMAICA RACES

SNOW BEAT DISOBEDIENT

Louis H. Captured Last Event by a Nose from Palette and Ostrich—Four Favorites Defeated.

Head finishes for two stakes and an overnight handicap, and close contests for the selling purses that made up the programme rounded out the best afternoon's racing of the week at the Jamaica course yesterday. The results dropped away from the general Jamaica average of successful favorites, as but two post choices managed to get to the winning line first.

The two stakes of the card brought out about the best quality of the horses that are engaged in the late Fall racing, and both produced thoroughly sensational struggles, three horses passing the winning post heads apart in the Oceanus, for two-year-olds, and a scant nose separating the winner and second horse in the Tamaqua Handicap.

The Tamaqua, six furlongs, for two-year-olds and upward, was the betting event of the day, and the only one of the eight starters that was not mentioned as a "good thing" was the last chance outsider Pelham. Gold Rose, with Knapp up, was the favorite throughout the betting, with Aeronaut, the top weight, a steady second choice, and Race King and Czaraphine the two next best backed. Aeronaut broke best when the field was sent away, Fustian then being second, but giving place at once to Gold Rose, which shot out of the crowd and went on to join Aeronaut in the lead, the pair racing together head and head, to the turn into the stretch, where Gold Rose showed first, Aeronaut, Fustian, Czaraphine, True Wing, and Race King following all close together at that point, where it looked as if any one of the number might win. The early pace told on both Gold Rose and Aeronaut when the last quarter was begun, and Miller, on Aeronaut, eased his horse for a few strides, while Knapp, on Gold Rose, kept on and had the filly stopping under him before another furlong had been run. Race King and True Wing had just showed in the first line when Miller went on with Aeronaut again, and, resuming the lead, kept Aeronaut going long enough to win in a hard-fought whipping finish by a nose, while True Wing was third, a length and a half away.

In the Oceanus Stakes, five and a half furlongs, for two-year-olds, the conditions let in the crack colt of the Fall, Disobedient, with 109 pounds, and his presence frightened out of the race five of the ten horses named to run. Disobedient then starting favorite at 5 to 2 on, with Snow the next choice. Father Catchem, which colt had been barred from racing because of his bad behavior at the starting post, ran because the bar could not apply to his stake engagements, but on this occasion he was neglected in the betting, and it made little difference when he repeated his manoeuvre of a few days ago and bolted as the barrier was raised, and then was left. Zienap led off, and went on in an effort to hold the track, but Disobedient, third to break, went to her at once, and, taking the lead in the first half furlong, made the running to the last turn, with Zienap at his neck and Snow close behind, the high-priced Oaklawn being outrun all the way. At the head of the stretch Zienap dropped back a bit, and Snow went on and joined Disobedient, and drove the favorite to his best efforts to maintain his lead. Snow and Disobedient beginning the fight for the finish as they straightened out for the run home. Both went a bit wide on the turn, however, and Zienap, running close on the rail, set out for them again on the straight, and closed steadily, all three running abreast through the last sixteenth of a mile, with whips and heels hard at work. They passed the post so close that none save the judges could separate them, the decision going to Snow by a head, with Zienap, on the rail, second, and Disobedient, in between the two, third. The race was the first in which Disobedient has been beaten in his last six starts.

The third close finish came in the last race, a handicap at one mile and a furlong. Ostrich, first away, was taken back at once, and with only Louis H., the second choice, behind him, waited while Palette and Gold Braid went sailing along in front, Palette making the pace into the last fifty yards, while Ostrich and Louis H. trailed until the last turn was reached, and then went on after Palette when Gold Braid dropped back beaten. Again the three horses in the lead fought out under whip and heels, Louis H., which closed on the outside, getting up in the last jump and winning by a nose from Palette, which beat Ostrich a short head. REVISE YACHT RACE RULES.

New York Yacht Club Committee Appointed to Effect Change.

The appointment by Commodore Bourne of the New York Yacht Club of its committee to revise the present racing rules and confer with representatives of the other leading clubs in these and Eastern waters to establish a uniform code, as was done in the case of the measurement rules, has set the ball rolling toward the adjustment of the manifest injustices of the old system. Including five of the best-known owners and amateur skippers in the vicinity of New York together with two members of the Regatta Committee of the club, the committee represents the highest efficiency that could be brought to bear to consider the important subject. The ground to be covered is of the greatest importance, as on the action of the joint committees depends the whole success of racing next year.

That the larger boats were unduly handicapped under the present system of allowances is the practically unanimous opinion of racing men. That the New York thirties should invariably win the cruising runs by big margins on every occasion during the New York Yacht Club cruise is evidence enough without going further. There is nothing that would so certainly drive the larger yachts out of racing as to repeat the experience of the past season. The expense of commissioning and maintaining a seventy-footer is enormous, and it is unfair that they should be deprived of their just honors by such a discrimination as was made last Summer. Every one expected before the Astor Cup races that one of the small yachts, Mimosa III., or one of the thirties, would defeat Mineola, Yankee, and Sybarita, and had it not been for the fluky weather the expectation might well have been realized. The Astor Cup race, the blue ribbon of local yachting, is too important to be won on any such condition, but should justly go to the larger yachts on any equality of contest.

How great a reduction should be made is a matter to be determined by the practical racing man. Many feel that at least a 20 per cent. reduction should be made all along the line. This would bring the boats that are built to the limit of the measurement rule into fair competition with those who take advantage of its provisions favoring cruising qualities and would give both racing and cruising exponents an equal chance. Whether the reduction will be so great or not remains to be seen.

Outside of this the only changes likely are those which will lead to the further clarification of the rules governing the right of way to reduce the number of protests that have marred the races last year and insure fewer fouls. It may be necessary to adopt some such rule as is enforced by the Larchmont Club against its own boats, making two disqualifications render a yacht ineligible for the remainder of the season. Some such means is necessary to eliminate those who habitually foul and take unfair advantage of their opponents, and it would only be objected to by those few skippers whose tactics have made them unpopular to the detriment of racing interests everywhere.

The possibility of restricting racing to amateur skippers is unfortunately remote. The smaller clubs that foster yacht racing and thrive on it alone are anxious to do this, but the New York Yacht Club is hardly prepared to take such a step. The New York is the only club that can exist independent of its racing and need not therefore cater especially to its racing men, but even it is sure to come in time to the conclusion that the majority of races should be limited to amateur skippers for the betterment of the sport in all quarters. The spectacle of an owner acting to all effect as cabin boy while his paid professional skipper rules and of other owners forced to accept insult or insolence from Captains whose skill is so great as to make them in demand in spite of their well-known discourtesy to opponents, rather than mar the sport by withdrawing their boats from competition against other yachts so manned, is a pitiable one which arouses the ire of every gentleman sportsman who is not disposed to look upon victory as the main end of racing.

Altogether the trend of racing seems to be along proper lines, and a bit of patient tolerance of objectionable features that it is still impossible to eradicate will bring the desired results quicker than by fighting them before the time is ripe for the reforms.

H. De B. Parsons, Oliver E. Cromwell, Trenor L. Park, J. Rogers Maxwell, Charles Lane Poor, Henry F. Lippitt, and W. Butler Duncan, Jr., is the committee named. They represent the best element in racing circles to-day.

NEWEST TURF ELEMENT IN AMERICAN RACING

English and Irish Jumpers Comprise Brownleigh Park Stable.

IMPORTATIONS WILL BE BRED

J. High Brown Has Gone Into Steeplechasing on a Large Scale—His Farm in New Jersey.

A new element in steeplechasing appears in the entries to the stakes of the United Hunts Racing Association at Morris Park of a stable made up entirely of English and Irish cross-country horses, schooled and trained according to the steeplechase methods of British trainers and nominated in the name of the Brownleigh Park Stable. The owner is J. High Brown, a Long Island cross-country racing enthusiast, who, intending to enter steeplechase racing, decided that he could secure better material abroad than he could get in this country, and who accordingly sent an agent to England, and so appears for the Fall racing with a ready-made stable of foreign horses.

Mr. Brown, who has entered into turf sport with a determination to stick to it, has gone further than merely buying a stable of jumpers, for he also has bought a farm in New Jersey, close to R. H. McCarter Potter's Pequest Stud, where he intends to breed thoroughbred and half-bred horses for the one purpose of steeplechasing, as a deviation from the general plan in this country of schooling broken-down or incapable flat racers for cross-country sport. Mr. Brown, in buying his English jumpers, is renewing the experiment, which was only in part successful, made by B. F. Clyde of the Goughacres Stable ten years ago, when Mr. Clyde brought to the United States a select stable of imported jumpers, most of them from Ireland, and raced them first at a meeting conducted by the National Steeplechase and Hunt Association, under a plan very similar to that of the present United Hunts meeting, over the same Morris Park field that is in use for the present meeting. The best of Mr. Clyde's imported jumpers was the Irish mare Lady Raymond, who was a frequent winner, but though he had a fair measure of success with that one horse, Mr. Clyde did not repeat the experiment, and English and Irish jumpers have had no real representation in American racing since then until the Brownleigh Park establishment was formed.

With his plan to secure ready-made jumpers, trained in the oldest and supposedly best school for steeplechasers, England, Mr. Brown sent A. W. Claxen abroad early in the Summer to act as his agent and select and buy cross-country horses that he approved of. The agent also was retained as trainer, and with a free hand selected the stable that he has taken hold of as trainer and manager.

The most notable animal of the lot is the bay mare Miss Hobhouse, aged, by May Boy-Bella, a half-sister to the imported horse Gate Bell, which has been racing in jumping events here for J. E. Widener. Miss Hobhouse in recent races in England was twice second in good company, and her quality, on the record of form, is such that the United Hunts Association's handicappers have made her the top weight, with 150 pounds, in the Great United Hunts Steeplechase Handicap, over a four-mile course, to be run on the last day of the Morris Park meeting next Saturday. Others of the tried jumpers of the new stable that are esteemed as horses of high class are the bay mare Park-na-Pogue, five years, by Bushy Park-Judas Kiss, and the bay mare Tibo, five years, by Prince Charley II.-Romany. Other veteran jumpers in the stable are Glengale and Stage Craft.

Notes of the Thoroughbreds.

Father Catchem ended his racing campaign as a two-year-old at Jamaica yesterday when he went to the post for the forty-eighth time since he started in January in California, and for the second time at that meeting bolted and was left at the post. As the colt's bad behavior had caused him to be put on the schooling list, as if forty-eight races had not educated him sufficiently, his owner concluded that Father Catchem had become sour, and decided to stop him and give him a rest.

Ostrich, sold at the G. L. Richards sale at Jamaica Friday, remained in the stable trained by Frank Lightfoot, and in the last race yesterday ran against Palette, which Mr. Richards retained, Lightfoot saddling both horses. On the result of the race it looked as if the stable showed nice discrimination in keeping Palette, as she finished before Ostrich.

The Stewards of the Jamaica meeting took a novel course yesterday after the finish of the Oceanus Stakes in officially noticing what appeared to be the foul riding of Martin on Snow, the winner. Instead of calling the jockey up after he had dismounted, as is the usual custom, Martin was stopped before he dismounted, and, sitting on Snow before the judges' stand, was questioned and lectured for riding too close to Disobedient, the beaten favorite. There was jostling between the two horses, but the Stewards declined to see a foul, though Martin was warned against riding so close in future.

L. Angarola, brother of R. Angarola, the horse owner, while in a crowd on the way to the race course at the Flatbush Avenue Station of the Long Island Railroad yesterday was struck on the head by a beam which fell from the structure in course of construction for the new station. His skull was fractured by the blow, and he was taken to a hospital dangerously injured.

Bettors who could not understand how they had lost bets made on Zienap, with Disobedient barred, when Zienap ran second to Snow, made a lot of trouble for a bookmaker who laid odds with the favorite out of the race for the Oceanus Stakes at Jamaica yesterday, and it required a lot of explanation from the manager of the betting ring to convince them that they had no right to claim their wagers. There was a long dispute, and a fight was threatened for a time by the bettors, who said they thought they were betting on Zienap for the place.

The apprentice jockey Sewell took the first place at the Jamaica track yesterday when he led the riders with two winning mounts—Monet and Louis H. Wiley and Notter were others of the light boys who had winning mounts, only two races going to the better-known riders.

The California Jockey Club has made the announcement in connection with the stakes for the Oakland meeting, which close on Nov. 1, that through the Winter two handicaps of $1,000 each will be offered each week when there are no stakes set for decision, and that two $600 handicaps will be on the programme every day, while the least amount that will be offered for any race will be $400.

SPORT AT THE TRAPS.

Crescent A. C. Shooters Have Keen Competitions and Make Good Scores.

Field shooting is attracting a number of the Crescent Athletic Club's crack shots at present, and there was an excellent representation at the Bay Ridge traps yesterday. The marksmanship, considering the high wind that prevailed during the greater part of the afternoon, was very good. Eight events made up the programme, the leading competitions being the second shoot for the Lott, Snyder and Mullerite trophies. Last week H. M. Brigham and W. W. Marshall tied at forty-seven each, but yesterday Mr. Brigham was absent, while the new handicap, which has just gone into effect, seemed to be damaging to Mr. Marshall and he finished fourth in the list. A. G. Southworth, the only scratch man, finished in the lead with 44 out of a possible 50 to his credit, while O. C. Grinnell, Jr., his nearest competitor, had only 36.

For the Snyder trophy, at twenty-five targets, O. C. Grinnell, Jr., and C. E. T. Foster tied at 22, while in the first shoot Dr. Keyes and W. W. Marshall were the high scorers, with 25 each. The Mullerite prize is contested for under similar conditions as the Snyder trophy, the final decision being reached on Saturday next. O. C. Grinnell, Jr., leads for the trophy with scores of 25 and 23, respectively, as against 22 and 24 for Dr. Keyes.

In the regular trophy competitions yesterday Dr. Keyes carried off the honors with two victories, while C. E. T. Foster, E. W. Snyder, and Lewis C. Hopkins each captured one prize. The style and general execution of Mr. Foster was one of the features of the day, and he promises to add considerable strength to the champion's team. Scores:

CHAMPIONS WON AT TRENTON.

No Trouble This Time in Hitting Local Y. M. C. A. Pitcher.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 21.—The New York National League team, baseball champions of the world, played another exhibition game here to-day with the Young Men's Christian Association team of this city. The game was arranged because the champions were surprised in the first contest last Monday, in that Raymond Egner, the crack Young Men's Christian Association pitcher, held them down to one run—this they got on an error. They wanted another chance at his curves. Egner was not in such good form to-day, and the Giants pounded him for twelve hits. The local team got two men around the diamond.

Trenton "fans," after the game, gave Enger a handsome diamond pin, the presentation speech being made by Assistant Postmaster Kendrick C. Hill. To-night Excise Commissioner Charles H. Gallagher tendered a banquet to the New York team at the Hotel Sterling.

The score of to-day's game:

Yale's Annual Fall Regatta.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 21.—The annual Yale Fall regatta was held at Lake Whitney this afternoon. The principal race was between 1908 and 1907 crews for the cup offered by George St. John Sheffield, and was won by the sophomore '08 crew by half a length. The three-crew race between two sophomore and the freshman crews was won on a narrow margin by Crew A of the sophomores, who held their lead throughout the race. The senior-junior race was the closest of the day, both crews sawing for a lead over the mile course, the juniors winning by a burst of speed at the end. The freshman crew distanced the junior "Sheff" boat by three lengths in the poorest race of the day. A junior crew ran down a canoe and upset two men.

ATHLETIC POLICEMEN IN CELTIC PARK GAMES

World's Champion Weight Thrower, J. Flanagan, Takes 5 Firsts.

FAT MEN'S RACE PROTESTED

Kinney Thought He Won, and Appealed to the Spectators for Justice—Cregan's Good Day.

John J. Flanagan had a decided monopoly on the first prizes yesterday in the athletic games at Celtic Park, L. I., held under the auspices of the Police Athletic Association. Not only did he win the four weight-throwing events, but, as if to show that he could do a little sprinting as readily as he can outclass his competitors with the 16 and 56 pound weights, he not only had the temerity to enter the fat men's race, but actually won it. That gave him a total of five firsts, a most commendable showing, for there were many mighty policemen arrayed against him in the different events. R. J. Sheridan was a close second to Flanagan in the four weight events, and he, too, joined the fat men in the dash, but only got third.

The fat men's race was the only event that occasioned a dispute. Nine well-knit, heavy members of the force toed the mark for the 100-yard run. It was nip and tuck from the start, and half a dozen men finished in a bunch. Andrew J. Kinney was placed second by the judges, but several of the officials credited him with winning.

"Flanagan won because he got his stomach over the tape first, but Kinney would have breasted the line first had he been stouter," said one of the watchers.

Kinney, however, protested hotly, and appealed to the spectators to aid him in getting justice, offering to run the race over on the spot. The judges showed no disposition to alter their decision, and after vain and loud appeals to his friends the disconsolate Kinney accepted the inevitable.

But for a foul, Flanagan would have created a new record in throwing the 16-pound hammer, as one throw carried the missile 173 feet 2 inches. He won, however, by 169 feet 1 inch. He made a splendid put in the 16-pound shot, 39 feet 4 inches, Sheridan doing 37 feet 9½ inches.

Next to Flanagan, M. J. Cregan was the biggest winner. He got three firsts, the 100-yard championship, the 220-yard and the 440-yard runs.

Besides the closed events for the policemen, there were three interesting relay races, in which members of the Catholic League, the Interborough League, and the Church Athletic League took part.

A cold wind blew over the field, but the policemen athletes seemed impervious to the raw atmosphere and wandered around the field in their thin running togs with apparent contentment. The summaries:

ENGLISH "SOCKER" TEAM WON FOOTBALL MATCH

Pilgrims Defeated New York by Score of 7 Goals to 1.

LOCAL PLAYERS OUTCLASSED

Good-Sized Crowd Watched First International Association Contest in This City—Play Was Clean.

The English Pilgrim Association football team yesterday defeated the All-New York eleven at the Polo Grounds by the score of 7 to 1. The victory was well deserved, as Capt. Milnes's "Socker" experts were the better all-round players. About 3,000 spectators watched the ninety-minute struggle and cheered the individual stars of both elevens. The Britishers decisively defeated the locals, but the latter at no time were disgraced. They made the Englishmen earn their goals and incidentally brought from Sir Charles Kirkpatrick, the Baronet, who kept the invaders' goal, some of the liveliest moves every credited to the English sportsman.

It was a clean, well-played contest, bristling with clever passing, intricate dribbling, capital dodging, and exceptionally hard kicking. Unlike the American college game, no time was lost in tending the injured, and not an unpleasant incident marred the display. It was a gratifying introduction of the English game to the New York public, and judged by the expressions, during and after the match, it is destined to occupy a high place in American sports. It was an appreciative crowd. In the centre box of the upper pavilion Lady Kirkpatrick was one of the most interested of the spectators, and her gloved hands frequently beat a tattoo as a New York player distinguished himself.

Bearing out the reputation he had sustained in international conflicts at home, Moran Woodward, the Pilgrims' centre, gave the cleverest exhibition of "socker" play that the critics had ever seen. He shot two goals, and although the local forwards were busy watching him, he was as elusive as a will-o'-the-wisp, and was in almost every play. Capt. Milnes was not to be denied. He was all over the field, and seldom missed his kick and got it away strong when it came his way. Little James Bryning, the 134-pound outside left, who made a lightning partner for Woodward, shot one difficult goal, but his work bore every earmark of championship. Raine distinguished himself by scoring three goals for the visitors in addition to doing yeoman service on the field.

For the home team Gorman put up a good fast game and scored the only goal for his side. Armstrong, at centre half back, played a consistent game, and Donald's work in the back field was brilliant at times, although erratic at others. McNeill showed more speed than any other player, but he was unreliable and easily beaten by the fast English forwards. Gray, the New York goal keeper, was easily the star of his side, and it was due to his remarkable work between the goal posts that the score was not more one-sided. He stopped almost impossible shots and saved many apparently sure goals.

Sir Charles and his associates, true to their home inclinations, gulped cups of steaming hot tea between the halves, and munched cakes.

New York was beaten by the combination play of the English fast forwards, whose clever foot and head work disconnected the New York back field. The local forward line was fairly fast and showed good combination, but the left half of the team and the back field, with the exception of Gray, the goal keeper, was weak. The local team played fast football for the first ten minutes of the game, but seemed to tire when the Britishers got properly under way. After this it was only a matter of how many goals the Englishmen would score.

Play started promptly at 3 o'clock, the English Captain winning the toss and choosing the south goal. New York kicked off. Bryning shortly afterward tried for a spectacular goal, but Gray saved cleverly. Milnes returned the kick out and New York changed the play, invading the visitors' goal. Gordon and Inglis worked together and by close formation attacked the British goal. Sir Charles Kirkpatrick was not ready for assault, and when Gorman made a low shot, the English Baronet made a poor attempt to save and the ball went into the net, New York scoring the first point in the game. On the kick out Raine and Coopland, by clever dodging and dribbling, tried to equalize matters, but Gray, after an anxious moment, fished the ball away. He again found himself in close quarters from an attack by Walmsley and Fletcher, but he was equal to the emergency and saved again. Woodward and Coopland again carried the ball down the field, when the latter passed to Woodward in front of the goal, who successfully negotiated a difficult shot and the score was even. The New York forwards did not settle and soon Bryning had the ball again for another try, but he shot by. Again did the Englishmen work the ball in the centre for a try, but Gray once more fisbed. He was so often in the way of the Britishers that they tried every trick in the game to baffle him. A good rally followed in front of the New York goal, but Gray was in waiting and robbed Vivian Woodward of a difficult goal. The leather was returned to British territory, when Barnsdale by clever dribbling carried the ball the entire length of the field. He passed to Fletcher, who headed to Raine, and after an easy shot England led by 2 goals to 1. Gorman and McNeill made distinct gains for New York, but Milnes was in waiting and kicked out of danger. Twice the Britons had corners, but New York rallied strong. Bryning and Walmsley then treated the spectators to some wonderfully clever passing, which resulted in Bryning scoring at a difficult angle, when half-time whistle blew with the score—Pilgrims 3, New York 1.

The teams changed goals and Woodward worked the ball down thirty yards by his individual effort, narrowly missing the net. McNeill kicked to Gorman and the ball traveled toward Sir Charles. McNeill's eagerness cost him the goal as the ball struck the top bar of the goal posts. It was an easy try with no one near him. The Pilgrims again worked the ball back and got a corner. Walmsley kicked to Woodward, who is tall, and heading a goal seems to require little effort from him. The ball shot off his head into the net. Score: Pilgrims, 4; New York, 1.

The work of the New York backs by this time was so unsettled that the visitors completely baffled their opponents by fast combination plays. With a foul putball Nuttal kicked a fifth goal from the thirty-yard line. It was one of the prettiest kicks of the game. Twice Sir Charles was called upon to jump, and but for Milnes's wonderful work Gorman must have scored for New York. After saving several tries Gray fell a victim to Raines from corner kicks twice in quick succession, when time was called, the final score being 7 to 1 in favor of the Pilgrims. The line-up:

Pilgrims, 7.	Position.	New York, 1.
Sir C. Kirkpatrick	Goal	Gray

AUTOMOBILING IN SIAM ON THE RAILROADS

C. J. Glidden Will Tour Strange Countries in Novel Fashion.

HE HOPES TO REACH TIBET

Route Planned of Over 6,000 Miles, Beginning at Bombay Dec. 1—Tires to Withstand Heat.

Charles J. Glidden will sail for Europe on Tuesday on the steamer Kronprinz Wilhelm, to resume his tour around the world in an automobile. He will not return to America until July 1. He has mapped out a motor car trip of over 6,000 miles.

Mr. Glidden will be accompanied by his wife. She has been with him on all of his previous trips. His touring car has been thoroughly overhauled for the journey in London, and will be shipped on the steamer Mooltan, sailing from London Nov. 3 for Bombay.

Anticipating excessive heat on his 4,000-mile trip through India, Mr. Glidden has had a number of tires especially made for the forthcoming tour. Automobilists who have traveled much in India have complained of the fact that the great heat of the earth frequently causes the tires to blow up. There is little fear of puncture, for the grand trunk road that Mr. Glidden will follow from the Afghanistan frontier to Calcutta, crossing the northern part of India, is nearly 2,000 miles in length, and is said to be one of the finest roads in the world. The tires that Mr. Glidden will use are constructed of especially prepared rubber, of greater thickness and solidity than is usual in the ordinary pneumatic tires.

In addition to this preparation for possible accident, Mr. Glidden will send ahead the railroad wheels which he had fitted to his car when he drove over the railroad two years ago to Vancouver. These wheels are made for the standard gauge, but as many of the railroads in the Far East have the meter gauge, a new set of wheels has been made to fit the car. Mr. Glidden expects to use these wheels more than the standard gauge ones, for he admits that some sections of the country, particularly in Siam, Burmah, and Indo-China, will perhaps be impassable for the automobile. Permits have been secured through the American Consuls and other officials in these places for permission to use the railroad in case of emergency.

"India is a great country for touring, with magnificent roads and also magnificent distances," said Mr. Glidden yesterday when seen at the Waldorf-Astoria. "I have my permit from the police authorities in Bombay to run my car in that city, and that permit holds good throughout India. From Bombay I will run north close to the Afghanistan frontier, but as it is practically impossible for a foreigner to enter that country, I will probably have to content myself with looking at it over the border. Then I will take the grand trunk road to Calcutta. This will be a run of nearly 2,000 miles, and the road is almost as smooth as a billiard table, I am told. From Calcutta I will go up to the foot of the Himalayas and get into Tibet if possible, but I think most of the Tibetan roads are merely trails and impassable for the motor car. I will then run back to Calcutta, crossing to Burma, and take my car up the Irawaddi River, visiting, if possible, the famous ruby mines near Mandalay. Coming back to Calcutta by water, the Indian trip will be resumed to the extreme southern portion, where I will cross over to Ceylon and spend two weeks there. From Colombo it will be a seven days' water trip to Siam, and after visiting Bangkok, Saigon, and Singapore, we will embark again on a steamship voyage to Nagasaki, Japan. I have secured the necessary permits to explore the interesting peninsula of Korea with my motor car, but in Japan there will be no difficulty in going all over the country."

Mr. Glidden expects to spend Christmas under the shadows of the Himalayas, and on New Year's Day he will be in Calcutta.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

Col. Albert A. Pope, it will be remembered, sent his entry to the Automobile Club of America several weeks ago for the Gordon Bennett race of 1906, should one be held next year in Europe. Though Col. Pope and his son, Albert L. Pope, were disappointed at the accidents which occurred to their cars in the Vanderbilt Cup race, they lost no confidence either in the machines or their drivers. Albert L. Pope has just sent his entry through the Hartford Automobile Club for the Gordon Bennett race.

M. G. Bernin, the Renault car representative, who speaks English, says that the foreigners consider Joe Tracy to be "quite a driver." Even this concession indicates that America is making headway.

French automobile makers say they have nothing more to learn from road races and advocate their abolition. If they would stick to this, and the American makers would indulge in more road racing, it would be a great thing for the latter. The fact that the makers abroad do not yet build cars so that more than 50 per cent. of the starters in a big race finish, indicates that the industry has much to learn.

MOTOR CYCLES POPULAR.

Endurance and Economy Tests Show Good Results.

Motor cycling has gathered a larger number of recruits to its fold this year than in any previous season. The sport has attained a popular hold and the outlook for a large addition to the ranks within the next year or two has never been brighter. The improvements in the machines themselves and their greater ease in riding are making a favorable appeal to lovers of open-air exercise. The motor cycle gives one all the enjoyments of the bicycle without the hard work necessary in pedaling over hills and rough roads. The motor does the work while the passenger gets all the fun and freedom of touring.

The endurance and economy runs held this year have been of great benefit in showing doubtful motor cyclists the serviceability of these machines. The competitive interest has also increased, but while there is a healthy desire to make records the racing element has been held subservient to the endurance tests, and the 250-mile run from this city to Waltham, Mass., was the most successful event of its kind seen in this country. This was held under the auspices of the Federation of American Motor Cyclists. There were fifty-one starters and twenty-nine made perfect scores, while over forty finished. Five controls were established along the route, and the conditions were somewhat similar to those employed in endurance automobile runs. It was a severe test, for the 250 miles had to be made within a few minutes over sixteen hours. The average speed was fifteen miles an hour, and the fact that so many contestants reached Waltham within the time limit was a splendid tribute to the ability of the motor cycle.

The officers of the Federation of American Motor Cyclists are R. G. Betts, President, of New York; E. W. Carritt, Vice President, of Brooklyn, and H. J. Wehman of New York, Secretary.

The Brooklyn Motor Cycle Club, in its recent economy run to Southampton and back, gave the clearest illustration thus far shown of the reasonable cost of motor cycle travel. Most of the tourists averaged from fifteen to twenty miles an hour, and the winner, F. P. Baker of Brooklyn, covered the distance, 190 miles, at an operating cost of 47 cents, or less than one-quarter of a cent a mile. Equally interesting was the performance of a motor cycle carrying three passengers which made the distance at a total cost of 68 cents. The railway fare was $4.53, and the best automobile record over the same route was 88 cents.

An interesting event which illustrates how the motor cycle is entering upon the domain of the automobile is the transcontinental motor cycle run now being made by W. C. Chadeayne. He left New York Sept. 12 on a trip to San Francisco and has already covered over 1,800 miles.

FIELD DAY FOR CYCLISTS.

Sports on Election Day and Road Race on Thanksgiving.

The annual "Field Day" of the New York State Division of the Century Road Club of America is always looked forward to by the members as the greatest day of the year, but the event this year is expected to eclipse anything ever held under the auspices of the division. It will be held on election day, Nov. 7, but the place has not been selected. The contests will be open to members of the division only, and exceptionally good prizes will be awarded to the winner of each event. The games will consist of bicycle races, novelty race, team pursuit races, three-legged races, races, team pursuit races, and many other interesting events. Admission will be free to the public.

On Thanksgiving Day the New York Division will hold its annual road race on the Coney Island cycle path. The distance will be twenty-five miles, and is open to all amateurs. The start and finish will be at Johnson Place, one block from Prospect Park Circle, and owing to police regulations the race will be started promptly at 9 A. M. ABBOTT GOLF CHAMPION OF COLLEGE PLAYERS

KNOWLES MAKES HARD FIGHT

Latter Only Beaten by 3 Up and 2 to Play on Garden City Club's Links.

Robert E. Abbott of Yale won the individual championship of the Intercollegiate Golf Association yesterday by defeating his classmate, Ellis Knowles, in the final thirty-six-hole match on the Garden City Golf Club links by 3 up and 2 to play. Both of the contestants are Yale sophomores, and the victory gives Yale both of the college golf honors for the coming year, as her team won the team event earlier in the week. Last year Harvard held both of the championships.

Abbott is a Plainfield, N. J., lad, while Knowles hails from Pensacola, Fla., thus making the match a contest between the North and the South for golf supremacy. Abbott was favored somewhat by the wind in the morning round and made some unusually long drives. On the long seventh hole, about 500 yards, he was hole high in two and won handily in 5 to 6. He made the next, also a long one, by a grand drive, mashie, and put, winning in 3 to 4 for Knowles. Abbott led by two on the ninth green. Poor putting by Knowles cost the latter the eleventh hole. Abbott lost his ball on the twelfth, and being unable to find it, lost the hole. He took the fourteenth and fifteenth handily, making long drives and perfect approach shots. He drove into the pond from the last tee and lost the hole, but had sufficient lead to end the morning round by 4 up.

Knowles showed that he could play a splendid up-hill game in the afternoon, and he forced his classmate to do his finest to win. Knowles won the first and third holes, and on the ninth green reduced Abbott's lead to one hole. His short work was practically perfect, and he ran down several long puts. Abbott captured the twelfth hole by a grand three, and won the next, getting a long drive, and his second shot taking him close to the green. Knowles was short on his approach and then missed a long put for a half. This left the Plainfield golfer three up, but Knowles took the fifteenth in 5 to 6. That, however, was his last effort, for Abbott excelled in playing to the sixteenth and won by perfect work on the green in five strokes to six, which gave him the match and the championship. FIREMEN GET MEDALS; MAYOR PRAISES HAYES

ENGINE CO. 78 BEST DRILLED

Manhattan Foreman Gets Stephenson Prize—No Criticism of the Department Now, Says McClellan.

Three hundred or more city officers, their wives and friends assembled in the drill yard at the rear of Fire Headquarters, 157 East Sixty-seventh Street, yesterday afternoon to witness the presentation by Mayor McClellan of gold medals for bravery to five firemen. The band in the drill yard played "Tammany" as Mayor McClellan walked to the centre of the circle

When the firemen were brought to the front accompanied by Chief Croker and Commissioner Hayes, the Mayor said:

"Commissioner Hayes and Firemen: As in all human probability this will be the last time that I shall meet you face to face during the term of the present Fire Commissioner, I cannot let the opportunity go by without at least a word of my own appreciation to you of him, and of my appreciation to him of you In the minds of the people of New York the Fire Department and Commissioner Hayes are inseparably connected. Since I have been in office there has never been a single word of criticism, direct or implied, even in the most unfriendly newspapers, even from the most unfriendly source, of the Fire Department of this city under its Commissioner."

As each man came forward the Mayor read the record of gallantry which had earned the decoration before pinning it to the fireman's jacket. The Bennett Medal was awarded to Michael J. Stephens, fireman, first grade, Hook and Ladder Company No. 4. He rescued Moses, Aaron, and Samuel Kritner, 14, 12, and 8 years old respectively, at the Attorney Street fire on Sept. 4, 1904. Stephens went three times to the fifth floor, through smoke and flame.

The Bonner Medal was awarded to Adam J. Metzler, fireman, first grade, Hook and Ladder Company No. 21. He rescued Amy Waldron from the cellar of the burning apartments at 355 West Thirty-seventh Street on Feb. 19, 1904. Metzler made a dash through a blazing hallway and was burned about the head and face.

The Strong Medal went to Patrick J. Moran, fireman, first grade, Hook and Ladder Company No. 8. At a fire at 483-485 Broadway on June 29, 1904, when Foreman Edward J. Levy was overcome by smoke and gas, Moran went in and dragged Levy out unconscious to the street.

The Trevor-Warren Medal was awarded to William Weber, fireman of the first grade of Engine Company No. 35, for bravery at a fire in 2,001 Third Avenue on May 14, 1904. Four floors of the building were ablaze when Weber ascended a ladder to the fourth floor and assisted Mrs. Tessie Klebs, her eight-months-old child, and George Florrie down the ladder. As he was descending some one called out that a woman was on the third floor. Weber went back, crawled to the middle of the room and found Mrs. Hermal Eyl on the floor unconscious. He attempted to drag her to the window, but was partly overcome and had to return to the window without her, but again went back, and, assisted by one of his comrades, dragged her to the window, whence she was taken to the street.

The Borough of Brooklyn and Queens Medal was awarded to John W. Larkin fireman of the second grade of Engine Company No. 106 for bravery on Jan. 1, 1904, at the fire in 153 Adams Street. He discovered John Walsh, 62 years old, unconscious in a burning bed on the third floor. Larkin lifted the man out of the bed and carried him through smoke and heat down stairs to the street. The man's clothing was on fire, and the flames burned Larkin's right hand.

The Stephenson Gold Medal for the best disciplined company during the year was awarded to John B. Conlon, Engine Company No. 78. This company is stationed in Manhattan, at the foot of Gansevoort Street.

Mayor McClellan and Fire Commissioner Hayes shook hands with each of the fire heroes and complimented them, the women guests applauded, and the band played. Then the exhibition class went through a drill with scaling ladders, rope climbing, and sliding from the roof. Engine 76 and Truck Company No. 77 responded to a test alarm and dashed to the corner of Sixty-seventh Street and Lexington Avenue. The engine pumped streams over the roof of the Seventh Regiment Armory, while the truck company ran up its seventy-five-foot extension ladder against the walls. The bed ladder, weighing 600 pounds, was raised in five seconds with a new compressed air machine, operated by one man. Then Mayor McClellan and his party went to luncheon in the Fire Headquarters Hall.

ERRAND BOY ON HER TRAIL.

Young Woman Has a 16-Year-Old Arrested for Following Her.

"There's no romance in this case, your Honor; it's strictly business. I want this young man to stop following and annoying me with his attentions," said Miss Josephine Smith of 305 West 134th Street in the Harlem Court yesterday.

Miss Smith is in charge of a store in the lower part of the city. Raymond Kelly, the "young man," who says he is 16 years old, was a former errand boy there. Since he was discharged two weeks ago he has followed Miss Smith home from her place of business nightly.

Last week a relative of Miss Smith had the boy arrested, but when he reached the station house refused to make a complaint on the boy's promise not to annoy the young woman again, but last Tuesday the youngster again began waiting at the store entrance for Miss Smith and following her home.

Questioned by Magistrate Breen he denied stoutly after some hesitation that he was in love with Miss Smith. He was held for examination.

INSANE MAN FOUND AT WORK.

Escaped from Rivercrest and Got a Job in a Machine Shop.

Joseph Gardham, who escaped from Rivercrest Sanitarium, at Astoria, L. I., by sawing the bars from a window, was found yesterday working in a machine shop at 54 and 56 Hudson Street, Jersey City, and taken back to Astoria.

No one in the shop had any suspicion that he was mentally unbalanced. J. J. Higgins, supervisor of the sanitarium, said that Gardham was harmless, his mania being that he had discovered a means of weighing the atmosphere.

Truck Drivers on a Strike.

The Truck Drivers' local of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters ordered a strike of the drivers yesterday in the stables of Thomas Orr, 322 West Twenty-first Street, for a low wage scale and recognition of the union. They submitted an agreement embodying the demands which Mr. Orr refused to sign. There were signs of trouble at the stables and police protection had to be furnished.

TRAGEDY IN WIDOW'S HOME.

Mother Ends Her Life and Her Little Boy's with Her.

Fifteen-year-old Bernard Dreher went home to luncheon yesterday and found his mother dead on the floor of her bedroom, and his little brother Joseph lifeless in the bed. The room was full of gas which flowed from a tube attached to one of the jets of the chandelier.

Bernard rushed to the street and told Policeman Bauer what he had seen. Bauer hurried to the Dreher flat, on the fourth floor of the tenement house, 1,101 Third Avenue, with the boy. The doors and windows of the room were thrown open by the policeman, and the gas was turned off, but it was too late, for both the mother and son were dead.

The policeman, in looking about the room, found a note on the bureau addressed to "Emily, my daughter." He had barely noticed it when Emily, a girl of 17, arrived. The note read:

I am all at fault. My children are innocent of this deed. My boy Bernard is a good boy and earns an honest living. My girl Emma works hard. They can take care of themselves, but I could not bear to leave my little Joseph behind. I take this step on my own responsibility.

The note, which was written in German, was signed "Mother." When the daughter read it she burst into tears and threw herself on her mother's dead body. When she became partially calm she told this story:

"I went to 6 o'clock mass this morning, and when I was leaving my mother called to me to pray for her. She has been worrying a great deal since father's death, two years ago, and we had to send her to the hospital twice.

"When my father, Henry Dreher, was alive he had a jewelry store at Sixty-sixth Street and Third Avenue. He was there for twenty years. He made a good living, but after his death we found that he had left very little. Mother feared for our future, until, I think, her mind was weakened."

Bernard Dreher is employed in a Third Avenue shop. When he rushed to his employer, told him of the death of his mother and brother, and asked to be allowed to go home, the man declined to let him go, and kept him at work for several hours.

SAW ONLY A PHANTOM RACE.

Hungerford Picked a Winner, Yet They Sent Him to Bellevue.

But for the intervention of friends E. C. Hungerford, commission merchant and automobile enthusiast of 224 West Fifty-second Street, might have ridden back from Jamaica race track last night with his pockets bulging with money instead of being held in the psycopathic ward at Bellevue.

He has been acting strangely through overwork, his wife says. Long before dawn yesterday, after sleepless hours over the racing sheets, he declared that he would put every cent of ready money he had on Yorkshire Lad in the second race. She promptly communicated with Dr. Dillingham of 8 West Forty-ninth Street, who telephoned to Michael J. Foley, a trained nurse, to go at once to the house and take charge of the case.

Mrs. Hungerford pleaded with her husband to stay at home, but he dressed and went out at 7 o'clock yesterday morning, the nurse shadowing. First he went to the New Amsterdam Bank and tried to draw his deposit, but it was so early he couldn't get in. Several times the nurse ranged alongside and Hungerford poured the praises of Yorkshire Lad into his ear.

Then Hungerford made a collecting tour of several Wall Street offices. When he started toward the Jersey ferries to get his automobile in Jersey City, Foley asked Policeman Bishop of the Church Street Station to arrest him.

In the Tombs Court Mr. Hungerford, through his field glasses, excitedly watched an imaginary horse race. Mrs. Hungerford, weeping, saw his arraignment, and only after some persuasion by Magistrate Flinn consented to his committal.

NEWARK TO HOLD A CARNIVAL.

Plans Picturesque Illumination and Parade on Hallow E'en.

The City Fathers of Newark, as a result of long agitation, have proclaimed Hallow E'en a municipal holiday and propose to make the carnival an annual event of general interest. Special committees have made all arrangements and money has been appropriated.

A grand stand at the City Hall is to be built and Broad Street is to be lined from Clinton Park to the Morris Depot with tiers of henches for a multitude of spectators. Seats will sell for from 50 cents to $2.

There is to be an evening parade seven miles long, which will move to the accompaniment of booming cannon and the bursting of rockets. Every industry in the city will be represented on floats in the line. The men will be at work as they roll by, reviewed by the rest of the people. These will be preceded by the city floats. On one will be the King of the Carnival on an eight-foot throne, drawn by eight horses. On either side of him will stand eight young girls brilliantly costumed. On another of the city floats will ride "The Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe," surrounded by fifty children. The "Swan" float is to be one of the handsomest. There are also to be the "Peace" float and the "Pumpkin" float to typify plenty and prosperity.

One feature is to be the cake walkers. Sixty young women, dressed to represent various types, will be directly behind the main band and as often as the music strikes up will do fancy steps and pigeon wings. Their leader will be nine-year-old Agnes Seeourger of West Street. All the houses in the city are to be alight from garret to cellar.

HACKENSACK'S DOG DAY.

Fashion of the Town Is Interested in an Assault on a Bull Pup.

The rank and fashion of Hackensack, N. J., is expected to be present to-morrow at a hearing before Justice James Hart in the case of Edward Goldschmidt, Frank R. Long, and an English bull pup.

Mr. Goldschmidt is a lawyer with offices in Pine Street, this city. He lives on the heights at Hackensack, which is a fashionable section. Over the hedge that skirts the Goldschmidt lawn is the home of Frank R. Long, the Jersey bridge builder.

For weeks an English bull pup owned by Mr. Long, and Mr. Goldschmidt's fox terrier have been arguing through that hedge. Yesterday morning the bull pup, unable to stand the taunts of the fox terrier any longer, crawled through the hedge and fell upon the other dog.

The terrier put up a great fight. They were at it hammer and tongs on Mr. Goldschmidt's lawn, when out came the lawyer with his golf bag on the way to the links. It is alleged that Mr. Goldschmidt pulled a brassie out of that bag and hit the bulldog over the head. The beast was revived only after several hours' work on the part of Mr. Long.

Mr. Long was angry. He went to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and lodged a complaint against the lawyer. A summons was issued. The case will be called at 2 o'clock, and everybody in Hackensack society wants to hear it.

PARTY LINES IGNORED IN NEW JERSEY FIGHTS

Antagonism to Bosses and Monopolies the Issue Everywhere.

FAGAN NAMED BY DEMOCRATS

Angry Republican Stalwarts Accuse Mayor of Treachery—Lentz Opposes a Recount of Votes.

Major Carl Lentz, the overthrown leader of the Republican machine in Essex County, N. J., is appealing to his followers to "save his face" at the first of the mass meetings he has arranged since the campaign opened. The meeting has been called for to-morrow night in Orange, and he is to be the orator of the evening. The Colby candidates have formally decided to keep away from all demonstrations under machine auspices, and the fear that he may be left to flock by himself has moved Lentz to send out thousands of letters begging every Republican who believes in his party to be on hand and help keep him in countenance.

There is little danger that Lentz will be neglected, however, for the wreck of all the party fences that has marked the fight of the people against the bosses has left the multitude free to flock where it pleases, and in the itensity of its interest in the battle it swarms wherever there is anything to be heard or to be seen. It has been a unique feature of the campaign here that the meetings have been attended by citizens of both parties, while in Jersey City the great Fagan demonstration of ten days ago was so closely matched in size and enthusiasm by an outpouring at a Democratic meeting Friday night as to balk guesses as to the likely outcome of the conflict there.

Mayor Fagan has just given to the voters an evidence of his contempt for the machine in his county by causing his friends to put him in nomination by petition as an "Independent Democrat." The petition is signed by 100 Democrats who have influence in the Democratic stronghold of the city. His nomination had already been put on file by the Republican Convention that named him, and the purpose of this second notice of his candidacy is not apparent. The explanation most credited, however, is that he is afraid to trust the Republican machine watchers at the polls and wants to be privileged to have watchers of his own to watch them.

At one of the ward meetings held to promote his election, the other evening, ex-Congressman Thomas McEwan declared that the managers of the Republican machine have arranged to take gangs of repeaters from New York into Jersey City to pile up a vote against the Mayor, and that the registry lists are full of fraudulent names for them to vote upon.

The scrutiny of these lists is the duty of the police, and three of the precinct Captains, more in sympathy with Col. Dickinson than with the Mayor, who are said not to have given the supervision that the Mayor's friends thought the lists should have had, were transferred Thursday, to commands where the fight will be least strenuous.

The new Captains got busy at once on the lists, and the report is that one of them has found on them hundreds of names that should not be there.

The Mayor has intensified the antagonism of the machine by appearing as an "Independent Democrat," and he stands a chance of losing practically all the stalwart Republican vote of the city. The thick-and-thin party followers protest that he tricked the Republican Convention into naming him as the party's candidate, with the purpose of playing an independent role in the end, and that if any one could have foreseen his present attitude toward the party he would not have been its standard bearer. That argument is expected to sway some of the ultra-partisans of the Republican fold; but their loss, the Mayor thinks, will be more than counterbalanced by the independent anti-monopoly sentiment that is manifest in all parts of the city.

The Mayor, insisting that the corporations are behind the bosses of both the parties, is determined that no trace of their influence shall be present in his campaign. With the same purpose Mr. Colby forced two of his candidates for the Assembly off the county ticket last Wednesday. This was done upon the discovery that one of them was a son of a Pennsylvania Railroad employe, and that the second had a more distant family relation with corporations.

Candidates Were Out of Place.

One of the discarded candidates confessed that he had no right on an anti-monopoly ticket, in his letter of declination. The other said he would probably lose his job if he were to take from his employer the time he would have to spend in attendance upon the Legislature.

While defeated in the county at large Major Lentz still managed to elect a bare majority of the committeemen in Newark, and so keeps in control there. Mr. Colby submitted affidavits to the court, alleging that many of the ballot boxes were stuffed, and demanded a recount of the vote in several of the wards. Major Lentz opposed the reopening of the boxes, and the courts have decided that if he objects they cannot be overhauled. Essex County has a Democratic Sheriff, however, and Mr. Colby is preparing to have the alleged frauds investigated by a Grand Jury.

Fresh evidences are coming from everywhere of the obliteration of party lines in the attack upon monopolies and their local managers. In Monmouth all party fences have been thrown down by the fierceness of the popular fight against the election of Francis, the Republican candidate to the Shrievalty of the county. The anti-gambler sentiment is arrayed, without regard to party affiliations, against him, and it is said that the "sports" of the county have been driven into making a deal with some of the Democratic leaders to save him from an overwhelming defeat.

Democratic Name No Candidate.

In Ocean County, where the local bosses defeated the selection of Capt. Warren as the Republican candidate for State Senator, in the face of popular demonstrations in his favor, six hundred of the party followers have nominated him by petition and the Democrats have made no nomination in the hope of helping his election. Ridgefield Republicans have indorsed the Democratic town ticket, as the outcome of the struggle to prevent the trolley company from taking possession of the town's handsome new roads.

All the stress of the contest in Passaic is on the campaign for the control of the County Board of Freeholders. Republicans all over the county are helping the Democrats to beat the ticket. They have organized Citizens' Committee to pick out the candidates who can be best trusted to take the county out of the hands of its old-time bosses.

There is now scarcely a county in the State in which the anti-monopoly or anti-bossism issue has not so upset party relations as to make the battle a non-partisan struggle.

ARCANUM RATE TEST.

Justice Garretson, a Member of the Order, Declines to Hear It.

Supreme Court Justice Garretson in Long Island City declined yesterday to hear an action against the Royal Arcanum. He said that there were two reasons why it would not be proper for him to consider the motion. One was that he was a member of the order, and the other that he had decided views on the points to be brought up. The case will come before Justice Maddox in Brooklyn on Monday.

The action was brought in the Kings County Supreme Court by James Lawrence Mock against the Supreme Council of the Royal Arcanum to test the legality of the change in rates made by the governing body of the Royal Arcanum.

The motion is to make permanent the injunction restraining the defendants during the pendency of the action, from enforcing the alterations made in its constitution and laws.

WORKED A $2.50 HORSE.

Woman Has the Owner of a Decrepit Animal Arrested.

Mrs. Lillian Rice of 46 West Eighteenth Street was driving down Sixth Avenue yesterday morning in a cab drawn by a big sorrel horse. Mrs. Rice is very fond of animals, and had chosen the particular cab because the horse was well cared for. The horse seemed to take pleasure in the exercise, and trotted along with his head up, sniffing the crisp air.

Coming up the avenue was a weary-looking animal drawing a heavy wagon. The big horse shied at the sight of the sorry plug, and Mrs. Rice ordered the driver to stop. She stepped out and commanded the driver of the forlorn horse to stop, too. This he refused to do, and Mrs. Rice caught the bit of the tired-out animal. Several men came to her assistance and dragged the driver of the wagon from his seat. Patrolman Faber of the West Thirtieth Street Station arrested the man. At the police station he gave his name as Hiram Jacobs and his address as 27 Stanton Street.

When arraigned in the Jefferson Market Court the prisoner said that he had bought the horse a week ago from a horse dealer in Twenty-fourth Street, paying $2.50 for the animal. He said he had fed the horse abundantly, and had not mistreated it. The case was adjourned until Monday for an investigation.

ASK INSURANCE COMMITTEES.

Suggestion to Investigators Who Want to Know About Albany Affairs.

It has been suggested to counsel for the insurance investigating committee that the committee would do well to call to the witness stand the members of the Senate and Assembly Committees on Insurance and give them an opportunity to tell what they know about the house which the Mutual Life Insurance Company, through A. C. Fields, has maintained at Albany during the legislative sessions for several years. According to the testimony, United States Appraiser McClelland, when Senator from Westchester, lived at this house, as did ex-Senator and Assemblyman Graney of Westchester while he was serving on the Committee on Insurance.

It has been noted since this testimony came out that there has been a Westchester man on the Insurance Committee pretty consistently for many sessions. Just at present this member is Assemblyman Apgar.

The Senate Insurance Committee consists of Senators McEwan of Albany, Malby, Fancher, Coggeshall, Drescher, Frawley, and Riordan. The latter is also a member of the insurance investigating committee. In the Assembly Committee on Insurance are Messrs. Lewis of Oswego, Apgar of Westchester, Sheldon of Cattaraugus, Hanford of Tioga, Thonet of Kings, Gray of Dutchess, Hastings of Orange, Shuttleworth of Erie, Willsnack of Queens, Ellis of New York, and T. F. Matthews of Kings.

The insurance investigators have been informed as the result of a search made by a lawyer of wide experience that since 1892 no insurance bill which the three big companies opposed has become a law, and that no bill they favored has failed to pass.

$2,250,000 IN NEW STOCK.

The Associated Merchants' Company Makes Preparations to Expand.

The Associated Merchants' Company, which owns the businesses of James McCreery & Co., Stewart & Co., Baltimore, and has large interests in the business of H. B. Claflin & Co., the Adams Dry Goods Company, C. G. Gunther's Sons, and several other large firms, announced yesterday its decision to issue $2,250,000 additional preferred stock. In the statement sent out announcing the issuance of the stock there is this sentence pointing at further development:

"It now seems desirable to replace the cash recently expended so that the company will be prepared for prompt action as fresh opportunities arise."

This was interpreted by men who have been watching the development of the company as possibly meaning the acquisition of another large store. The combination acquired last season the businesses of H. O'Neill & Co. of this city and J. N. Adam & Co. of Buffalo. A high official of the company declined yesterday to admit that it was contemplated to take in another business. He admitted, however, that the business to be conducted in the large building now being erected at Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street for John Claflin, President of the Merchants' Company, might ultimately be taken in by the combination.

The stock will be offered to the holders of all classes of stock up to 15 per cent. of their holdings. The time for subscription will expire on Nov. 15. Thirty per cent. must be paid on date of subscription, and the other 70 per cent. before Jan. 5, 1906. The stock will be sold at par.

BRONX VERY DRY,

And Will Be Nearly So To-day—Water Main Being Connected.

The Bronx went dry as far as its water supply was concerned last night, and the announcement was made by the department that there would be only a partial supply to-day.

The section south of East 161st Street was shut off from the supply to enable the department to connect up the main under the Southern Boulevard. A partial supply for to-day from the Williams Bridge reservoir was arranged.

THE LAW OF MISCONDUCT.

Peckham's Counsel Says It Isn't In the Federal Statutes.

Some very novel law points were raised yesterday by Lawyer Hugh Gordon Miller in his argument before United States Commissioner Ridgeway, on the motion to discharge Moses Haas and Frederick H. Peckham from custody, on the ground that the charge against them did not constitute a crime. The men were recently indicted by the Federal Grand Jury in Washington on a charge of having conspired with Edwin S. Holmes, Jr., formerly of the Department of Agriculture, to defraud the United States, through the cotton reports.

Lawyer Miller said there was no such offense known to the Federal statutes as "misconduct." The Government practically admits this, but contends that misconduct is an offense at common law, and that as the common law is in force in the District of Columbia, a conspiracy to commit misconduct in Washington is, therefore, within Section 5,440 of the Revised Statutes, under which the men are indicted.

The letter of acceptance of President Roosevelt, written less than a year ago, was quoted by Mr. Miller. In the letter President Roosevelt said: "There is no common law of the United States that can give jurisdiction of an offense in a Federal court." This opinion has been supported, declared Mr. Miller, by all the Federal attorneys throughout the country, including Attorney General Moody and ex-Attorney General Knox.

Mr. Miller said there was nothing in the indictment to show that the Government could have actually been defrauded. If the charge of "misconduct" held, he said, it would be possible to indict a Federal clerk for going to see a ball game if he left before the usual hour, as it would plainly be "misconduct." Mr. Miller cited a number of cases tending to show that it was necessary for the Government to show how it had been defrauded, wherein the Government was defrauded or deprived of some material thing or benefit.

Commissioner Ridgeway reserved decision.

WILL OPEN PHILIPPINES TO THE BIG INVESTORS

Republicans Plan to Induce Exploitation of the Islands.

TARIFF OFF THEIR EXPORTS

Policy to be Followed Is Indicated in the President's Speech at Atlanta.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—President Roosevelt's references to the Philippine question in his speech at Atlanta yesterday, it is learned, indicate the nature of the legislation to be proposed by his friends in Congress this Winter. A bill is to come out of the Ways and Means Committee, with Chairman Payne's imprint on it, providing for free entry into this country of Philippine products and also opening up the Islands to investment. The restrictions at present imposed are to be swept away.

Mr. Roosevelt's reference in his speech to the "unfortunate measures which have seriously, in some respects vitally, hampered the development of the Philippine Islands" marks the first step away from the policy from "The Philippines for the Filipinos." He serves notice that the policy of excluding capital has failed. The Philippines need capital, and there are two ways of securing it. One is by alternation of the tariff arrangements which now levies a heavy burden upon Philippines products exported to the United States. The other is by removing some of the restrictions which have prevented the direct investment of capital by individuals or corporations from the States.

Chairman Payne and Mr. Grosvenor of the House Committee on Ways and Means, who went with Secretary Taft to Manila, are in favor of free trade. This is impossible until the expiration of the ten years' provision in the peace treaty with Spain, by which her ships and commerce have the same privileges as our own. That treaty will not expire until April, 1909.

There is nothing in that treaty, however, to prevent giving fee entry into this country to Philippine products. Representative Payne's bill will provide for the free entry of all Philippine products except sugar and tobacco, upon which a duty of 25 per cent. will be levied. There is some talk that the measure will provide for free trade after the expiration of the treaty clause.

Under the present law, which prevents one man from owning more than one mining claim, any extensive development of the mining interests of the Islands is impossible. With enormous tracts of agricultural land in the public domain, it is unlawful for one man to buy more than forty acres, and a corporation may secure only 2,500 acres. Any extensive agricultural investment is absolutely shut off.

It is probable that the Payne bill will give to corporations the right to obtain 10,000 acres in the more thickly populated islands, and in such wild and unsettled islands as Mindoro and Mindanao that limit may be increased to twenty or thirty thousand acres.

ANOTHER OLNEY SUSPECT.

Prisoner In Paterson Jail Held to Await Inquiry.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., Oct. 21.—Locked up in the Paterson jail is a man wanted by the Middletown authorities in connection with the inquiry into the murder of the Olney brothers on Oct. 6. He is Michael Israel, 22 years old. He worked near the Olney farm.

Israel enlisted in the United States Navy three months ago, deserted, and was captured. On the first chance he again deserted. He is held here on two charges of robbery in the Spring and Summer.

Israel this evening was asked whether he had ever been in the vicinity of Middletown.

"Sure," he answered, adding: "I worked for a man up there by the name of Floyd Meade, a farmer, who has a place near Howells."

"How long ago?"

"About two months."

"Where have you been since?"

"Well, I skipped out from there because I heard the navy authorities were after me, and I caught a freight and came to Paterson."

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Oct. 21.—The authorities here decline to disclose their grounds for desiring to question Michael Israel regarding the murder of the Olney brothers and little Alice Ingerick.

30 HURT IN TRAIN WRECK.

Broken Rail Sends Cars Off the Track Near Fort Scott.

FORT SCOTT, Kan., Oct. 21.—Westbound Missouri Pacific Passenger Train No. 40, from Kansas City and St. Louis, was wrecked five miles west of Fort Scott early to-day. The accident was caused by a broken rail.

About thirty persons were more or less injured. Three or four were seriously hurt, and one of them, it is believed, will die. Thirteen persons were brought to the hospital here.

The train at the time of the accident was running thirty miles an hour. The engine tender struck the broken rail and left the tracks, followed by the cars, which turned over. The engine alone remained on the tracks.

THINK THIEF BURNED MONEY.

Evidence That Cunliffe Destroyed $10,000 Belonging to Express Company.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Oct. 21.—Detective Captain Arnold said to-day that he believed Edward G. Cunliffe told the truth when he declared that he burned a part of the $101,000 stolen from the Adams Express Company at Pittsburg.

Mrs. Henry Clark, a chambermaid at the Arlington Hotel, where Cunliffe had a room while here, told Capt. Arnold to-night that on Oct. 11, the day after Cunliffe went to the hotel, she found some black stains like those of wet charred paper on the carpet in his room, and also found similar stains on the bathroom floor, while the bowl in the bathroom was clogged with burned paper.

Cunliffe said that one package of $10,000 or more consisted of one-hundred-dollar bills issued by a bank in Pittsburg; that he realized that to attempt to spend any of this series of bills would probably get him into trouble, and that he therefore burned the entire package over a kerosene lamp and threw the charred remains into the bowl in the bathroom.

Both Capt. Arnold and Superintendent of Police Birmingham consider to-night that the stolen money is now all accounted for.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 21.—After a night of distress, in which he was questioned by detectives, Edward G. Cunliffe, the Adams Express thief, was at daybreak committed to a cell in the Pittsburg police station. He is now in the county jail, held under $50,000 bail.

"They surely put the blocks to me all right," said Cunliffe as he sank on a bench in the police station at daybreak.

SEVEN AMENDMENTS TO BE VOTED ON, TOO

Proposed Constitutional Changes Await Final Approval.

CITY DEEPLY CONCERNED

Provision for Her Future Water Supply Is Made in One Proposed Amendment—Taxation Changes.

With the official ballot that will be handed to the voter on election day will be another ballot devoted wholly to proposed amendments to the State Constitution. There are seven of these. Under the Constitution, all such propositions must be first passed by two succeeding Legislatures before they can be submitted to the people. These seven having received the approval of the Legislature as prescribed, now come before the people for sanction.

The last amendment to develop a big fight was that bonding the State for $101,000,000 for the building of a barge canal along the route of the Erie. The great majority of the counties up the State rolled up large votes against the proposition, but Greater New York's affirmative vote was overwhelming.

Amendment No. 1 applies especially to the City of New York. If adopted it would allow New York to expend large sums for its water supply, where the city now is hampered because of its debt limit. The amendment provides that in the computation of New York's debt, in determining its borrowing capacity, all bonds issued after Jan. 1, 1904, for purposes of water supply may be omitted.

Amendment No. 2 relates to direct taxation. It provides for the payment of interest and sinking fund installments on all State debts out of any funds in the State Treasury and for the remittance of the direct tax that is now levied for these certain fixed charges, principally the canal debt.

Provides for More Justices.

Amendment No. 3 relates to the judiciary. It provides that the Legislature shall increase the number of Justices in the Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth Judicial Districts until there shall be a Justice for every 60,000 inhabitants. In the First and Second Districts the number of Justices would be one to each 80,000 inhabitants. Under the Constitution the Legislature must rearrange the eight judicial districts following the taking of the census. A reapportionment of Justices must also be made by the Legislature.

Amendment No. 4 would give to the Legislature power to regulate the wages and hours of labor of men employed on public works in any political subdivision of the State. Strong forces have been at work among the legislators to have this amendment passed twice so that it might come to the people.

Amendment 5 is considered by many a sop to the agricultural element. It is said that it is hoped to make it an offset to the barge canal, which rural residents so strenuously fought. It provides for the bonding of the State for $50,000,000 for "good roads." The amendment is desired by the up-State leaders, and the farmers, as a rule, favor the good roads proposition, though they are anything but a unit as to how money for good roads should be expended. In the session of 1905 there were repeated attacks on the Higbie-Armstrong Good Roads act, and many attempts were made to repeal it. The opponents favored good roads, but didn't think the provisions of the present good roads law gave everybody a square deal. They said that the contractors got too much and the taxpayers too little.

Changes in Financial System.

Amendment No. 6 is one that relates to the State's system of finance. At the present time, State certificates of indebtedness run for a term of twenty years. It is proposed to extend the term to fifty years.

Amendment No. 7 is being scrutinized very closely by lawyers all over the State; and no less by Supreme Court Justices. At present, Justices of the Supreme Court designated to an Appellate Division cannot perform any of the duties of a Justice "other than those of a Justice out of court and these pertaining to the Appellate Division, or to the hearing of motions submitted by consent of counsel." If the amendment should be adopted, Justices assigned to the Appellate Division could perform all the duties of a Justice of the Supreme Court in any department, except the one of the Appellate Division to which they are designated.

On the ballot containing the seven amendments spaces will be set off marked "Yes" and "No." An "x" is marked in either space as it is marked before the name of a candidate on the ballot. If hundreds of thousands fail to vote on some or all of the amendments politicians would not be surprised.

Thus far in the campaign in Greater New York, practically all the speakers have refrained from stumbling onto the amendments. Up the State the orators have touched upon them only in spots.

Circus Man Held Up for Debt.

Antonio Pubillones, proprietor of a circus that has been performing in Cuba and Central and South America, was detained on an order of arrest yesterday as he was about to sail for Havana. William Hawkins recovered judgment for $1,058.67, as the assignee of Alfred N. Gillette, an acrobat with the circus in February, March and April, 1902. It is alleged in the complaint that Gillette took part of his salary in notes and lent the circus man money.

TALE OF A DEATH WAGER.

Men Found Drowned Said to Have Bet on Which Would Die First.

Coroner Flaherty of Brooklyn is investigating a story that two men, both of whom have been drowned, made a bet as to which would die first. The story is told by friends of one of the men.

The men are Adam Hillman of 114 Reid Avenue and Henry Schwanwedel, a retired merchant, of 311 Forty-fifth Street. Hillman was an engineer in a meter factory at First Avenue and Forty-fifth Street. The two men had been close friends for years. For some time both had been in ill-health and seemed depressed. Schwanwedel disappeared on Oct. 8, and four days later Hillman disappeared. Last Saturday the body of Schwanwedel was found at the foot of Fifty-eighth Street. Hillman's body was picked up in the bay at the foot of Sixty-fifth Street on Friday. Policeman Lynch of the Fourth Avenue Station says that some of the men who worked with Hillman in the meter factory told him that Hillman a few days before he disappeared had told them that he had bet Schwanwedel $500 that he would die first.

UNION ANTI-MILITIA EDICT.

Bakere the Latest to Forbid Their Members Becoming Soldiers.

A resolution was adopted yesterday at the annual convention of the Journeymen Bakers' and Confectioners' International Union, now in session at Maennerchor Hall, forbidding its members to join the militia of any State.

Several other unions have taken similar action, on the ground that if union men joined the militia, they might be called upon to fire on fellow-unionists in strike riots.

TRACKED A MOOSE 18 DAYS.

Maine Guide, 87 Years Old, Got $500 Capture in Record Hunt.

Special to The New York Times.

BANGOR, Oct. 21.—William Douglass of Eustis, who at the age of 87 still acts as guide for hunters and kills his full share of game every season, is credited with the longest moose hunt on record. It lasted eighteen days and yielded a prize that paid well for all his work and exposure. The bull moose charged upon him and fell before the last shot in his rifle.

He set out with provisions for ten or twelve days. Soon he came upon large tracks. The moose had passed between two trees that stood so close together that the animal's hide came in contact with the rough bark, leaving tufts of hair adhering to both trees. A little further along he saw where the moose had thrown its head into the air, leaving antlers' marks upon a sapling. Douglass estimated that the animal weighed not less than 1,200 pounds and had antlers spreading fully sixty inches.

For twelve days Douglass hung on the trail. The morning of the thirteenth day found him out of food and suffering from rheumatism. He shot a buck deer that gave him four days' food, and kept on after the big game. On the seventeenth day he caught sight of the moose several times. On the eighteenth day he noticed blood on the trail. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the hunter heard a loud bellowing, and the next instant saw the moose charging down upon him. Seven shots in rapid succession seemed to have little effect. The infuriated animal was but three jumps away and "Old Bill" had only one cartridge in the magazine.

Just as the great antlers seemed swinging over his head the hunter sent his last shot. It missed the head, but ploughed the length of the backbone, cutting the hide as if with a knife, and the moose dropped at the hunter's feet. It weighed 1,225 pounds, and next to the one shot at King Bartlett Lake, was the largest moose ever killed in Maine. That night Douglass rolled himself in all his blankets and then wrapped himself up in the warm hide to keep from freezing. It was a $500 prize.

Cornerstone Laying Years Late.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., Oct. 21.—A cornerstone laying after a church has been in use for several years is an uncommon sight, but the congregation of St. George's Episcopal Church, Maplewood, participated in such an event this afternoon. The church was built several years ago, and space was left for the cornerstone. The Rev. Mr. Stacy, rector of the church, presided at the ceremony.

William M. Ivins, a Man of Many Facets

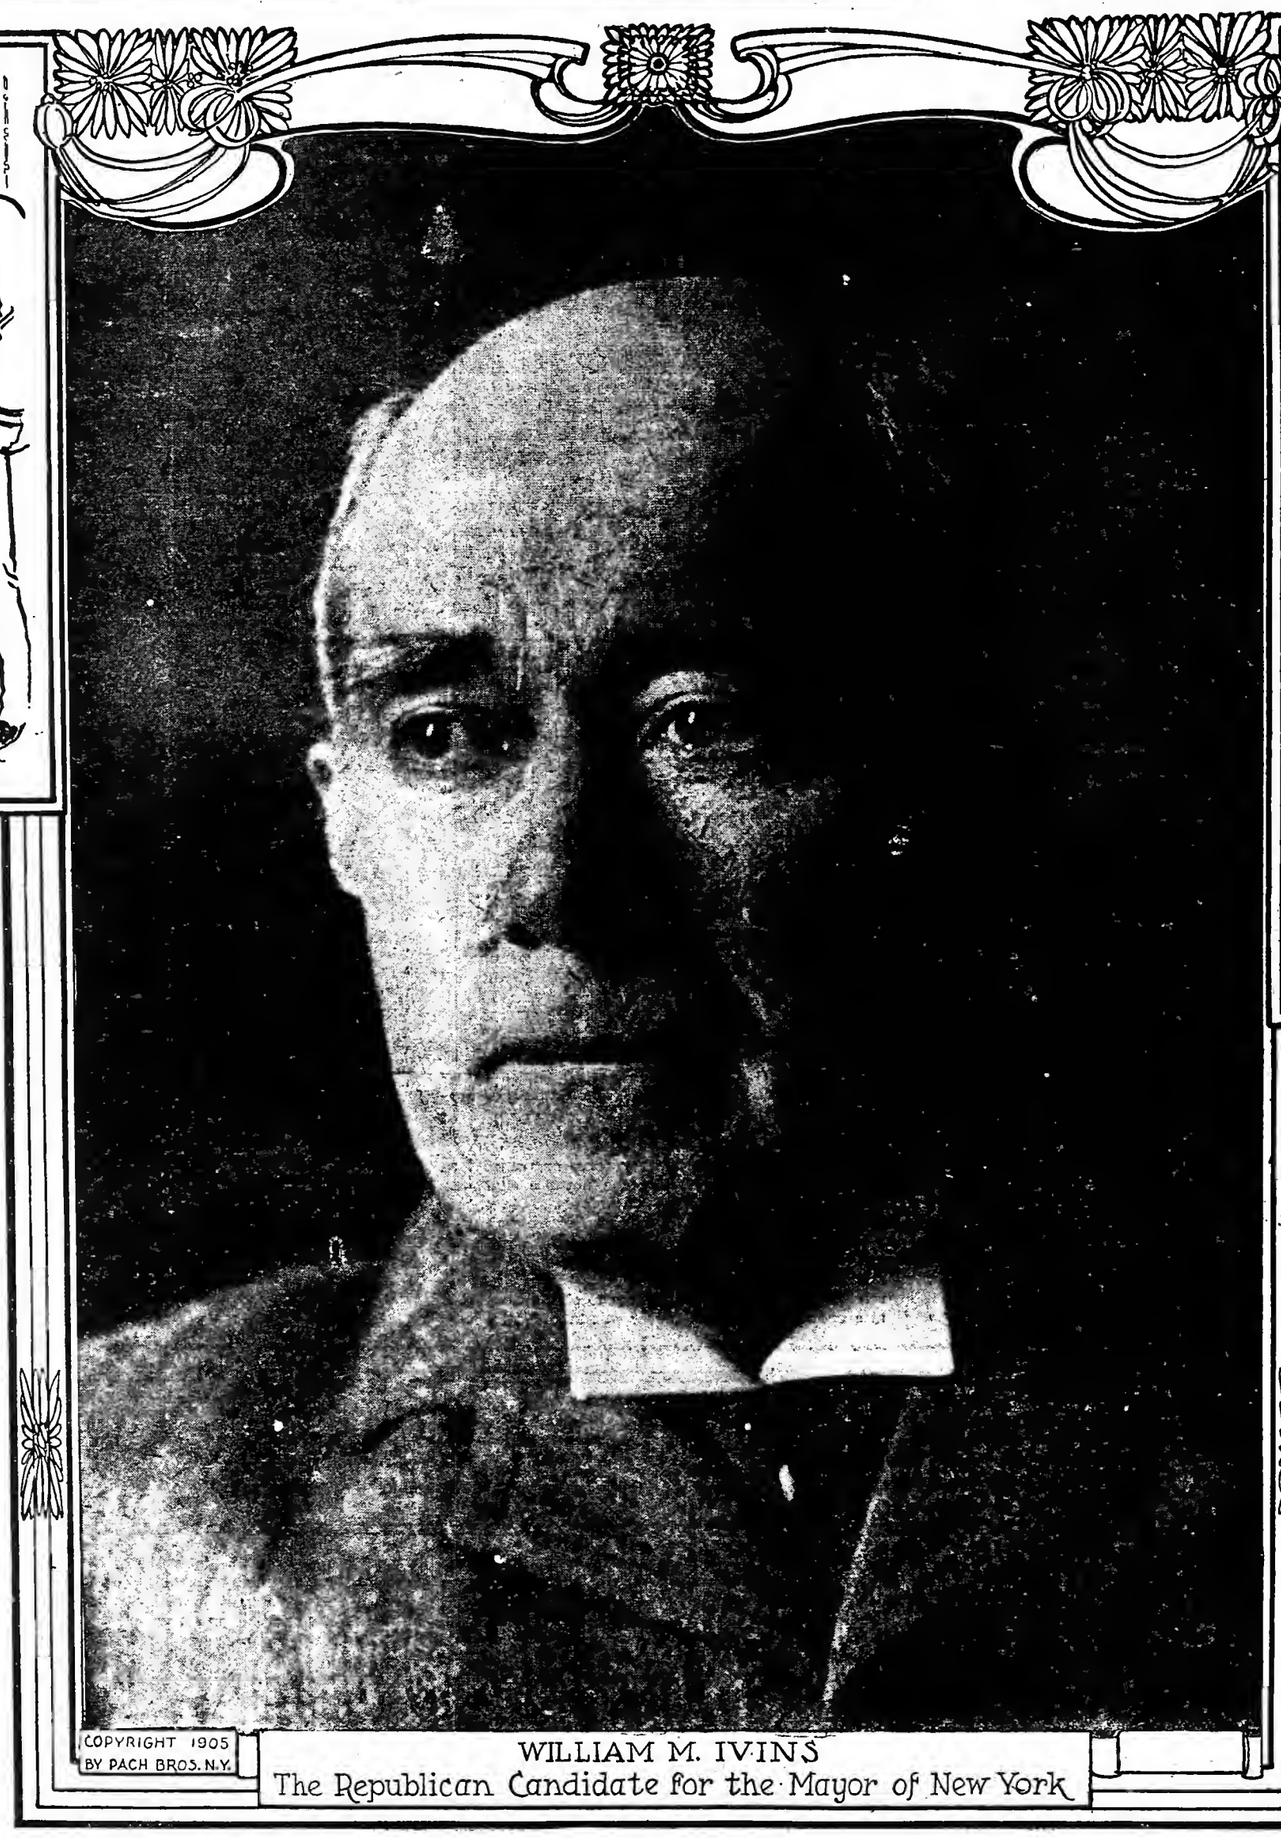
TALKING TO A DELEGATION FROM BROOKLYN



COPYRIGHT 1905 BY PACH BROS. N.Y.

WILLIAM M. IVINS
The Republican Candidate for the Mayor of New York

DISCUSSING CAMPAIGN LITERATURE

A Mind Tireless of the Acquisition of Knowledge, No Man in New York Has a More Practical or Profound Insight into Public Affairs---Why He Has Surrendered the Enjoyment of His Library for the Strenuous Activity of a Political Campaign.

NO ONE would say of William M. Ivins, as was said of Whewell, that "science is his forte and omniscience his foible," for Mr. Ivins has never distinguished himself in science. But although he is not now omniscient, he would be if his life could be sufficiently prolonged, for I doubt if a man more avid of knowledge, of all sorts of knowledge, has lived since Buckle and Macaulay. The mere touch of his mind upon a subject of real human interest begets in him a desire to know all about it.

The chance of a Summer's holiday once directed his attention to field flowers and plants. A telegraphic order to his bookseller brought him the needed text book and treatises, and in a period of time which a slower mind would have wholly occupied in a mere beginning of study, he had made himself a botanist of really solid acquirements, with a good knowledge of the flora of the vicinity.

An evening's conversation happening to turn upon the subject of biology, there was talk of the cell and its nature—enough to arouse the sleepless curiosity of Mr. Ivins. Again the books and treatises were commanded to attend him. He works a book hard, but its toil is soon over, and his wonderful memory serves him so well that the repose of the volume is thereafter little likely to be disturbed. The cell with all its story was quickly brought within his sphere of knowledge.

The modern languages are his intellectual delight and his tools of trade. He has a working knowledge of half a dozen modern tongues and needs it, for the engagements of his international practice call him now to Rio Janeiro, now to Paris, and sometimes to Lisbon, Madrid, Berlin, or St. Petersburg.

His insatiable propensity for study, moreover, makes him look upon the whole body of modern literature as his prey. Equipped by his command of the languages, he seizes in the original upon things historical, statistical, economic, diplomatic, scientific, whatever his craving mind demands, and bears it off to his cave. Long ago he was Judge Advocate General of the Second Division of the National Guard, and took his office so seriously that he made himself master of military law.

\+ \+ \+

Political history and diplomacy are the studies to which he has most seriously and continuously devoted himself. Somewhere in his library there must be piles of notes and manuscript that are the product of a fine ambition that once seized him to write a history of diplomacy. Other like accumulations tell of yet other works of learning and research begun in enthusiasm and laid aside with regret when he heard somewhat loudly the call to professional tasks. I believe he was writing a history of the rubber trade, including the botany and geographical distribution of the plant and the organization of the traffic in and the manufacture thereof, when Mr. Halpin broke in on his studious seclusion with the Republican nomination for Mayor.

Any one who knows William M. Ivins knows that he could not have hesitated. With his temperament he could have more fun in one city campaign than in writing a sheifful of books about the rubber trade.

Mr. Ivins may begin to write many books, but I have my doubts whether he will ever finish even one. He is too fond of acquiring and using information ever to devote much time to imparting it. The space of man's life, after all, is but three-score and ten, and there is such a prodigious lot of interesting things that one wants to know about—and he wants to know about them all.

Within his bosom there burns like an inextinguishable flame the desire for the acquisition of knowledge and information. He disdains all restraint of it, and when he has some fresh subject in hand, sleep, society, the table, everything but imperative professional duty goes upon the deferred list. No man of my acquaintance is his equal in rapidity of acquisition. A book, a document, a verbal statement of fact gives up its meat and substance to him at once. It is of course this celerity in assimilating information that has enabled him to push his inquiries so far in so many pleasant fields.

These things show the man in his home, in his library, away from the strifes of politics and the cares of law, devoted to the pure intellectual delight of questioning the universe about its nature and its workings. The Ivins of politics and of public life is a different being, yet of like qualities and methods. The same desire and command of full knowledge are manifest, but the slippered dilettantism of the library then gives way to the quick efficiency of the man of action.

Mr. Ivins entered public life and the service of the city at the invitation of Mayor William R. Grace. On a November day in 1880, the day after election, Mr. Ivins met a friend who was also a friend of Mayor Grace, and said to him in a jocular way: "Well, I see Mr. Grace has been elected, but he can't get along in the Mayor's office without me." To Mr. Ivins and his friend this meant nothing in particular. But the remark was repeated to Mayor-elect Grace, who made some inquiries which resulted in his asking Mr. Ivins to call upon him. As a result of the interview he asked Mr. Ivins to take charge of the organization of the staff of the Mayor's office, and in a general way to manage and direct the transaction of office business.

Mr. Ivins felt called upon to assist his chief by the performance of duties quite outside those of a clerical or secretarial nature. He was as familiar with the public business as the Mayor himself, and Mr. Grace's great energy and extraordinary capacity for executive work was well supplemented by the activity and acuteness of his secretary's mind. It was his constant endeavor to promote the efficiency and the official and political success of Mayor Grace's administration.

Among other works of public value he prepared charges against Police Commissioners French, Nichols, and Matthews, alleging neglect of duty in the work of street cleaning. Some of the chief men in the County Democracy advised against the presenting of these charges, arguing that the evidence to support them could not be obtained. At the hearing it was discovered that Mr. Ivins had formulated accusations in the military form of charges and specifications, and he marshaled in their support evidence secured by more than one hundred men sent out by him to note unclean streets, failure to remove ashes, garbage, and so forth. Mr. Ivins was the author of the bill creating a separate Department of Street Cleaning, which was bitterly fought by the Republican machine at Albany, but finally became a law, after the newspapers had printed in black-faced letters the names of the Republican members and Senators opposing it.

\+ \+ \+

Mayor Grace offered the first Commissionership under the new bill to Lieut. Commander Gorringe, who declined. Mr. James Coleman was then appointed, and was held to a very strict performance of duty. It was Mr. Ivins's custom to ride through some part of the city every day and observe how the streets were cleaned, Mayor Grace taking some other part of the city for a similar tour of inspection on his way to his office.

Having no liking for the combination with Tammany which brought about the election of Franklin Edson as Mayor in the Fall of 1882, Mr. Ivins retired to private life, but continued to hold the office of School Commissioner, giving a considerable part of his time each day to its duties. He took a deep interest in extending the teaching of manual training, and also assisted materially in the preparation of the reports of the School Board.

In 1883 Mr. Ivins became a business associate of Mr. Grace, assuming a general supervision of the firm's business and holding its power of attorney. This became a partnership in 1886, which continued until 1889. Democratic friends of Mr. Cleveland, feeling that a strong Mayoralty candidate in this city would promote his chances of election to the Presidency, obtained the consent of Mr. Grace to become a second time candidate for Mayor in the Fall of 1884. He was elected, and in the May following his inauguration Mr. Ivins by his appointment took the important office of City Chamberlain, which he continued to hold through the Grace administration and the Hewitt administration, until the election of Hugh Grant as Mayor, in 1888.

During his term as Chamberlain Mr. Ivins caused the books of account in every city department to be diligently audited, and instituted examinations into the affairs of the Sheriff's office and the County Clerk's office, disclosing conditions highly profitable to the incumbents, but of a nature so reprehensible from the public point of view that they were afterward corrected by legislation. Mr. Ivins was at this time, as, indeed, he had been previously and has been since, a profound student of financial administration and fiscal affairs. Undoubtedly the expert knowledge gained in this incidental way has been of great use in his law practice, which has often called him to undertake large organizations.

The older generation of men familiar with city politics, if they have good memories, will recall that Mr Ivins at this time was a conspicuous figure in public affairs in this city. A reformer by instinct, hostility to Tamanny seemed to have been born into him. The hatred Tammany's chieftains felt for Mr. Ivins was boundless. Gifted with more brains than all of them put together, perfectly fearless, as contemptuous of their threats as he was of their persons and their principles, equipped for his campaigns against them by a marvelous detective faculty, he continually gave them the best of practical reasons for hating and fearing him. He was a member of Mr. Hewitt's "Cabinet," and as Mr. Hewitt was always irascible, and Mr. Ivins not always temperate and conventional in expression, little "spats" were not infrequent between them. The respect which each felt for the other, however, quickly restored good relations.

When Hugh Grant became Mayor Mr. Ivins returned to the practice of law. As early as 1886 he had begun an agitation for ballot reform, which he with others carried on actively during subsequent years. The first Australian Ballot Reform bill, called the Yates-Saxton bill, was the fruit of repeated conferences and discussions between representatives of the Commonwealth Club, in which Mr. Ivins was a leading spirit; the Reform Club, the City Reform Club, and the labor organizations. It was passed by both houses of the Legislature during the session of 1888, but was vetoed by Gov. Hill. Mr. Ivins at this time wrote a small book with the title "Machine Politics," which threw a revealing light upon the practices of organization bosses in the City of New York. Some of the material of this book was afterward issued in a pamphlet on electoral reform, which was an effective instrument in the propaganda which led to the enactment of the new ballot law, and this, with subsequent amendments, is still in force.

Mr. Ivins's brilliant service as counsel for the Fassett Investigating Committee brought him prominently before the public in 1892. The committee was charged with the duty of inquiring into the administration of the city government. Its counsel, with his abundant knowledge and his great joy in making the wicked writhe, pushed the probe so deep and into so many unexpected portions of the patient's anatomy that he caused great pain and alarm to men high up in both parties, insomuch that through a deal between the State bosses the committee was presently "called off." Mr. Ivins took great pleasure in making a report, however, which is an exceedingly valuable treatise on municipal government.

I have said that Mr. Ivins's professional engagements sometimes call him far afield. In 1893 he was summoned to Rio de Janeiro under appointment as counsel to the Brazilian Government to investigate the Missiones boundary dispute between Brazil and the Argentine Republic. The dispute arose as to the construction of a decree of Alexander Borgia in 1493, being the last Papal instrument dividing up and apportioning the unknown world. President Cleveland was the arbitrator, and Mr. Ivins won a complete victory for Brazil, securing to that republic a territory as large as the State of New York.

When the Cuban rebel Garcia was arrested in this country in 1897 for a violation of our neutrality laws in attempting to send munitions of war to his fellow-insurgents, Mr. Ivins volunteered to defend him. It was a characteristic act, and Mr. Ivins conducted the case with characteristic skill and energy. The trial lasted fourteen days, but the jury returned a verdict of not guilty after five minutes of deliberation.

It falls to the lot of few lawyers to take part in larger affairs or to acquire skill and competence in business transactions of greater weight and moment than those in which Mr. Ivins has been rather frequently concerned during the last fifteen years. An instance of this was his visit to St. Petersburg in 1898, when in behalf of an American firm he concluded with the Russian Government a contract for many millions' worth of war material.

\+ \+ \+

His capacity for business organization is rather remarkable, even in this dwelling place of so many captains of industry. I remember once to have seen a project of business laid before him, not in a professional way, but for a friendly "curbstone" opinion, and the operation of his mind was interesting. He asked a quick question or two as to the estimated cost of plant, the daily capacity of output, and then from his own knowledge of the markets supplying the factor of price, he rapidly covered a sheet of paper with figures in tabular form, which when complete formed a concise and admirable prospectus of the business venture in question, that was, in fact, used as a prospectus with investors and correctly prefigured the results of the business, as its subsequent history has shown.

Yet when I was going over some of these old times and old memories with Mr. Ivins in his library the other day; he suddenly broke in upon the serious course of the talk with an invitation to examine his collection of Napoleonic medals. "You have never seen it," he said; "it will interest you." It did indeed interest me, for it filled a cabinet, and in its owner's belief it is a complete medallic history of Napoleon. But it interested me, too, as an evi-

Miss Marlowe and Mr. Sothern Reply to Their Critics.

They Contend that They Have Not "Dealt Irreverently" with Shakespeare in Their Presentation of "The Taming of the Shrew" as the Wildest Sort of a Farce.

MISS JULIA MARLOWE and E. H. Sothern, whose elaborate production last Monday evening at the Knickerbocker Theatre of Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew" was greeted with a diversity of critical comment, have a grievance. They stated it one evening on the stage of the Knickerbocker after the curtain had fallen upon Miss Marlowe's beautiful shrew, well tamed and glad of it—stated it in earnest and eager language that left no doubt that their interpretations were based upon long and intelligent study and a thorough familiarity with the best examples.

Whatever may be the critical comment upon the Marlowe-Sothern production, it is likely to be the unanimous opinion that a considerable measure of gratitude is due to two such eminent artists for their efforts to stimulate a renewed public interest in the acted works of Shakespeare, devotion to whose plays has so often spelled ruin for actors and managers. In the present case, however, if one may judge from the warmth and enthusiasm of last week's audiences, a popular success appears to have been achieved.

But Miss Marlowe and Mr. Sothern have a grievance, for all that. They particularly object to the chargo of dealing irreverently with the Shakespearean text.

"There is no objection to be made to any criticism that deals with performance or execution," said Mr. Sothern. "But when one's conception of the spirit of a play or a part is attacked or misunderstood, surely an artist has the right to be heard in his own defense."

"Of course," interjected Miss Marlowe, still in the costume of the shrew, her hair divinely tousled, "we quite realize that in a matter as wide as the question of Shakespearean interpretation there is a deal to be said on several sides, but we have studied the play with much care, and we hope and believe that our conclusions will win the respectful consideration of intelligent people."

"Somewhere in his 'Modern Painters,'" Mr. Sothern went on, "Ruskin illustrates with fine aptness the truth that he who would induce his fellows to view an old subject from a new angle must expect to meet rebuffs. His illustration was the case of Turner's first attempt to exhibit his landscapes in the gallery of the Royal Academy. What are to-day considered the richest possessions of those walls were then rejected because in none of the young artist's canvases was there 'a brown tree.' A landscape without a brown tree was then unthinkable to every critic, from members of the Governing Board down to the veriest penny-a-liner. Too few of us have the habit, so strongly recommended by Prof. William James, of keeping some window of the mind open for the admission of new light."

"Precisely," continued Mr. Sothern, "and the criticism to which we most take exception is that we have directed this light so that it falls through colored glass upon the pages of the poet. On the contrary, it is absolutely incontrovertible that no version of the play with which modern theatregoers are familiar has dealt so reverently with the original text as the version in which Miss Marlowe and myself are appearing. There are three acting versions familiar to playgoers in this country. One is the version published by French & Co., another is the Daly version, the third is the version prepared by William Winter, and in which Edwin Booth appeared. In none of these is the text so faithfully adhered to as in our version."

"And that, too," put in Miss Marlowe, "in face of the fact that our audiences nowadays don't want to come to the theatre until half-past eight and wish to get away not long after half-past ten."

"Why, look at the Booth version," cried Mr. Sothern eagerly. "It was reduced to the limitations of two acts and Booth usually played it as part of a double bill. Nobody can complain of that—at least, I am not now complaining of it—but when I am accused of handling the text without gloves it is easy to show that my gloves have been thicker than those of anybody else who ever handled it."

"How about the elimination of the Induction, along with Christopher Sly?" inquired Mr. Sothern's interrogator.

"We have eliminated the Induction, it is true," replied Mr. Sothern. "But we have the authority of Fleay, Furness, and Furnivall that it is the only indubitably spurious portion of the text. Moreover, it has nothing to do with the play proper. Even Shakespeare himself apparently forgot all about it after he got started, for it is never referred to, nor is Sly, after the first act. But let me say right here what can be said of no other acting version of the 'Shrew' with which I am familiar—that there is not a single interpolated line, not a line written in."

"No, Sir, not one," added Miss Marlowe triumphantly, with a toss of her head, unconsciously but strikingly like the one she gives when Katherine, hearing Petruchio announce their wedding for Sunday, replies:

"I'll see thee hanged on Sunday first."

"Just bear in mind," went on Mr. Sothern, "that in the Booth version speech after speech is written in to cover the events which the condensation to two acts had cut out. In a less degree the same thing is true of the Daly version."

"But ours," declared Miss Marlowe, "is the first ever given in this country with strict fidelity to the text of Shakespeare—absolutely the only one."

"And yet," declared Mr. Sothern, sitting back in his chair and crossing one of Petruchio's battered boots over the other, "one of our critics says that our version is far broader and more primitive than Shakespeare intended it, or something to that effect."

"Ah!" cried Miss Marlowe, warming to her subject and edging forward on her chair. "Now we are coming to the kernel of the nut."

"The farcical kernel, eh?" said the interviewer.

"Just so," declared the actress. "It has been intimated that the play has been conceived by us in too broadly farcical a vein; that our stage business is exaggerated and extravagant beyond the bounds of reason."

"That's nonsense," put in Mr. Sothern. "It couldn't be. It simply couldn't be."

"Of course not," declared Miss Marlowe. "If we need authorities, we have only to quote Furnivall again, who declared that 'The Taming of the Shrew' is plainly a farce. But we don't need authorities. How can any intelligent person read the play—that's all we want them to do—and fail to agree with us that the piece is farcical in the extreme and was so intended by Shakespeare? Just look at the internal evidence to be gained from such stage directions as are rarely supplied by Shakespeare:

"For example, in Act II., Scene I., we have Katherine's speech: 'If that be jest then all the rest were so,' followed by the stage direction, 'strikes her.' So, in the same scene, 'Flies after Bianca'; also, 'enter Hortensio with a broken head.' Again, in Act IV., 'Throws the meat about the stage,' and in the same act, 'So get thee gone, thou false, deluding slave,' with the stage direction, 'Beats him.'

"Everywhere the play abounds with indications that its author meant it to be played in a highly farcical spirit, such as farce is known to have been in Elizabethan days. When you consider what business may legitimately read in between the lines and add to this the fact that wherever Shakespeare was at pains to indicate the business himself, it was to broaden and emphasize its farcical nature, it appears almost impossible to give the play with the wild furiousness which is its intended spirit—absolutely impossible, I think." Miss Marlowe waved her prompt book definitively.

"To be sure—to be sure," approved Mr. Sothern. "When you play Shakespeare, why not play Shakespeare, as far as the limitations and conventions of the modern stage will allow? What's the use of reading into his plays, be they farce or tragedy, a lot of fictitious values for which not the slightest warrant can be found. 'The Taming of the Shrew' is a farce—the wildest sort of farce."

"The Bard just amusing himself, eh?" suggested the interrogator.

"Exactly," cried Miss Marlowe; "amusing himself and his audiences. Why try to clothe the farce in a grandiose dignity it never was intended to possess or read into it secondary meanings when its obvious sense is so near the surface?"

"It is easy to demonstrate conclusively," said Mr. Sothern earnestly, "that no interpretation could be too extreme and no business too boisterous to be in harmony with Shakespeare's own conception of the spirit of the piece. Is any of the business I adopt or any business that any actor could adopt more extravagant than the mad pranks which Shakespeare declares Petruchio performed in church, before the very altar? Take the speech of Gremio, in Act III., Scene II.:

> I'll tell you, Sir Lucentio: When the priest
> Should ask if Katherine should be his wife,
> 'Ay, by gogs-wouns', quoth he, and swore so loud,
> That all amazed the priest let fall the book;
> And, as he stooped again to take it up,
> The mad-brained bridegroom took him such a cuff
> That down fell priest and book and book and priest.

"And again:

> '* * * A health,' quoth he, as if
> He had been aboard, carousing to his mates
> After a storm, quaff'd off the muscadel,
> And threw the sops in the sexton's face.

"Why," continued Mr. Sothern, warming to his subject, "Petruchio regarded it all as a huge practical joke. Katherine must be out-Heroded. If she stormed, he must be more stormy; if she shouted, he must out-shout her. If she were fantastical, unreasonable, violent, he must exceed her in each of these qualities, and all to the end that he might not merely subdue her, but show her the folly of scorn and contempt and ill-humor, so that her natural sweetness, whose depth he perceives under all her folly, may but shine out serenely above all."

"Coming down to details again," interjected Miss Marlowe, who had all the while been running through her prompt book, "one of our critics complained that we proceeded along the lines of palpable burlesque, especially in the country house scene, when Petruchio mounted the table and destroyed the dishes. An old actor in our company tells me that this business was introduced in the sixties by H. A. Perry, who mounted the table and sat there in a chair as judge between the disputing Grumio and the tailor. Perry was an actor trained in the best traditions of the old school, and was a man of such infinite personal charm that if he were alive to-day he would probably be a matinée idol."

"They hadn't invented them in those days," interpolated Mr. Sothern, with a smile. "And don't forget, too, that Edwin Booth played this scene practically with the same business which I employ."

"And as to clothes," Miss Marlowe hurried on, "being a woman it's my right to dwell particularly on them. In our adherence to the farcical interpretation, we have taken pains to choose the extremes of Elizabethan styles. We have made them as extravagant as the most extravagant of the business with which we play the piece. We have—"

"And look here—" put in Mr. Sothern eagerly, "but I'm interrupting you, Miss Marlowe."

"Oh, that's all right," laughed his co-star; "what I have to say will keep."

"Well, then," hurried on Mr. Sothern, "that horse to whose bizarreness some critic objected, is not bizarre enough. It's quite too smart in its appearance. Something's got to be done to it."

"I was going to call your attention," said Miss Marlowe, picking up her remarks where she had dropped them, "to the pains we have taken in the fourth act, when Katherine and Petruchio arrive at Petruchio's house, to make Katherine look as if she really had fallen under the horse and was 'bemoiled' and had 'waded through the dirt,' as Grumio says she had. I have never seen this done before. But see how it emphasizes the strength of her desire to get the pretty gown which the tailor brought, and which Petruchio declares is 'carv'd like an apple-tart.'

"As to my own conception of the character of Katherine," Miss Marlowe went on, "I have something to say in defense of that. Certain of my critics have lamented that I have not seen fit to hold to the traditions which make Katherine the 'imperious beauty of Padua,' as one writer calls her; the stately, lofty, tragedy-queen sort of person. My answer to that is that, whatever the traditions are, as fostered by the interpretations of various actresses who have appeared in this rôle, Katherine was no such sort of person. A study of the text will, I make bold to say, convince any impartial mind of the truth of this statement.

"As for the recognized authorities, we have only to turn to Furnivall again. On this point he says: 'We must look on Petruchio as a man wanting a hunting mare now, a goer, never mind her temper. He looks at her in the stable; she kicks and bites; he quietly rakes her straw and hay out; lets her stand all night; gallops her next day till she can't stand; tames her, and is then in the first flight ever after. Kate is a spoiled child, strong willed, spoiled by her father's weakness and her sister's gentleness. She has a genuine grievance, that she, the strong, the mistress-mind, is not to have a husband, while her weak sister is to have one. Kate, like all reasonable girls, wants to get married, and though she is not the cooey, turtle-dove girl that her sister is, who attracts so many men, she knows that she has that in her which is worthy of a man. She is soured by neglect, and she bullies her sister from envy.'

"This interpretation of the character of Katherine must be that of every intelligent person who reads Shakespeare's text carefully and is content to take that, and nothing more or less, for guidance. And Shakespeare is enough for me. We are playing Shakespeare. Surely he's big enough in himself. Why should we not be content to take the water from the spring without a dash of condiment?"

"Well, well," said Mr. Sothern, bringing the discussion to a close, "all kinds of progress in this world of ours have largely been accomplished by persons who have had the courage, I do not say to abandon the traditions of the past, but to respect them only in so far as they are useful and true, and never to become hidebound by them. Thus for forty years the English stage knew no other Shylock than the buffoon, the comic figure drawn by Doggett in the Lansdowne version, until Macklin and Kean lifted this conception from the depths of low comedy to the high plane of tragic intensity it has since held in the public mind. Yet not until this performance turned the Drury Lane Theatre from a failure into a success and filled its pit with audiences that literally rose in cheers was this interpretation forced upon the critics.

"So, you see," added Miss Marlowe, "we've thought it only fair to make this statement of the considerations upon which we have founded our conception of Shakespeare's farce. It's always of interest, I take it, to know upon what foundations any artistic structure is reared, and if our little causerie shall result in directing the attention of thoughtful people to a subject that is so well worth discussion we shall feel abundantly satisfied."

"Let them read the play and see what's really in it—not what somebody has read into it," concluded Mr. Sothern.

Measuring the Infinitesimal---Recent Scientific Achievements

By William Hallock, Ph. D., Professor of Physics, Columbia University.

IN science as in every-day life it is interesting sometimes to do things just for the sake of doing them, just to show that they can be done. There may be serious question whether there is much practical value in the demonstration that an automobile can be run at a speed of over sixty miles an hour for a hundred or more miles, and yet many wish to do it, or see it done. Similarly the skilled mechanic who succeeded in drilling a hole lengthwise through a cambric needle demonstrated his skill and patience, but where was the practical value of what he produced? Such performances come under the head of what the boy calls "doing stunts." The scientist is human and needs his recreation, and sometimes "does stunts." The construction of a "pseudoscope," which reverses the perspective in objects, is amusing, but it proves nothing, and can scarcely be said to advance science.

Of a decidedly more serious character are such endeavors as may lead to some fact which is of interest in itself; for example, what is the smallest object that can be seen with a microscope, what is the faintest light that can be seen, what amount of energy must there be in a sound in order that we may hear it? These and other similar questions are of decided interest, although they may not really advance the science of acoustics, for example, more than the pseudoscope does the science of optics.

How many of the millions of people who use the telephone daily have even the remotest idea of its action, and how many of those who know that the electric currents which come over the line cause the iron diaphragm to vibrate back and forth, how many of even these stop to think what an infinitesimal motion of that piece of iron conveys to their ears the tales of joy and sadness?

Before a recent meeting of the Royal Society of London Dr. P. E. Shaw explained how he had been able to measure the motion of the diaphragm of a telephone, which is just sufficient to produce an audible sound, and had devised therefor an electric micrometer which surpassed in accuracy and sensitiveness anything of its kind as yet produced. By this means it was claimed that a motion of the two-millionth part of a millimeter, or the fifty-millionth part of an inch, could be measured, and that this was the smallest motion ever measured. It is not a matter of much intrinsic importance what the motion of such a diaphragm is, but if Dr. Shaw has added to the equipment of science a new tool of the highest accuracy and delicacy, that is an important contribution.

The apparatus as devised and used by Dr. Shaw consists essentially of a set of levers six in number, with a total multiplication of the motion of two thousand. Upon the outer end of this system was placed a micrometer screw, with a divided head, reading to a thousandth of a millimeter. The instant of contact between the short end of the levers and the object was determined by electric contact. In a critical comparison of this method with that used by Wills two or three points are of especial importance. The two levers of Wills would certainly seem preferable to the six of Shaw, inasmuch as every joint is a source of error and trouble. In the case of Wills the motion of the perfectly free end of the lever was measured with a micrometer microscope, in general a better method than the screw micrometer.

It would seem, however, that the real source of danger in the method of Dr. Shaw is in the matter of the electric contact. As Dr. Shaw points out, these small distances are such that a spark would jump across if even a single dry battery were used. Thus very small electric forces must be used if it is to be assumed that there is no sparking across, and indeed it is very questionable as to whether this assumption is at all justified. It would seem rather that the method is subject to the assumption that the spark jumps the same distance each time a measurement is made, an assumption which those familiar with conditions of sparking may believe a little hazardous. No doubt the method of Dr. Shaw is "the best yet" for some things, and he has made a real contribution to the tools of science; nevertheless it would seem that the record for measurement of the smallest distance must be given to Dr. Wills.

Several years ago Dr. A. P. Wills, then of Bryn Mawr, now of Columbia, investigated the question as to whether a bar of bismuth changed its dimensions on being subjected to a strong magnetic field. Dr. Wills used nothing more elaborate than two very carefully constructed levers and a very high-power microscope to measure the motion of the outer end of the second lever. With this comparatively simple instrument he was able to measure about one eight-millionth part of a millimeter, (one two-hundred-millionth part of an inch,) or a distance only one-fourth the size of that measured by Dr. Shaw, and the method could undoubtedly be forced to still higher delicacy if it were necessary. Dr. Wills was not merely "doing stunts," nor indeed simply making an interesting measurement; he was settling a fundamental point. It had been stated by a reputable observer that bismuth, though not one of the "magnetic metals," nevertheless elongated under the influence of the magnetic field. The work of Wills practically settled this question in the negative. Incidentally it may be remarked that these distances are far beyond the practical or even the theoretical resolving power of the microscope, which lies at about the ten-thousandth of a millimeter or the two-hundred-and-fifty-thousandth of an inch.

Any one might naturally be led to ask: "How do these distances compare with the dimensions of the atom or molecule? Are we not splitting atoms?"

No one has ever measured directly the size of an atom, and yet the indirect methods are so satisfactory that the results must claim our respect, if not our complete acceptance. We may get some sort of an idea of the size of an atom from the statement that the smallest particle of organic matter visible to the powerful microscope must still be composed of about five hundred million atoms.

If we place the limit of resolution of the microscope, as above stated, at about one ten-thousandth of a millimeter, then we must allow that each of those atoms will have a space of about an eight-millionth of a millimeter across in which to disport itself. If this distance is compared with those measured by Dr. Wills and Dr. Shaw it will be seen that we might measure the diameter of an atom directly if we could manipulate it satisfactorily. In this connection it must be borne in mind that the physicist has now definitely abandoned the atom as the ultimate smallest particle of matter, and now looks to the electron to take this place of honor. The electron is about the thousandth part of an atom of hydrogen, or something like the tenth of its diameter. Some one may suggest that this is about "the little end of nothing whittled down to a point," but the physics of to-day knows perhaps more of the real properties of these electrons than it does of ordinary masses of matter.

If for a moment the attention is turned to delicacy of measurement in other matters, where fundamental principles are involved, one of the first to occur to the knowing ones would be the measurement of light pressure. The electromagnetic theory of light, originated by Maxwell some thirty or forty years ago, in its mathematical development indicates that when a beam of light is reflected from a mirror it exerts a certain pressure upon the mirror, just as a ball bouncing off from a wall exerts a push back upon the wall. The theory also pointed out that this pressure would be very slight indeed, and for many years it was beyond the limits of measurement. Finally Lebedew demonstrated the existence of this predicted pressure, and Nichols and Hull were able to measure it with a satisfactory degree of accuracy. The pressure due to sunlight upon a square centimeter is about one ten-thousandth of a dyne, or in other words the pressure upon a square inch (6.25 square centimeters) would be about the hundred-millionth part of the weight of the ordinary two-cent letter. It can be readily understood that even this small pressure per square inch would still amount to some hundred thousand tons pressure upon the whole surface of the earth. If this enormous pressure is pushing the earth away from the sun, why is it not forced out of its orbit and out into space? Our old friend the attraction of gravitation looks after this, and in reality overbalances it many million times. Nevertheless, if we stop to think a moment we must see that this may not be the case with smaller objects. The surface of a sphere diminishes with the square of the diameter and its volume with the cube of the diameter, so that the ratio of the surface to the volume, or mass, of a sphere is increasing in the same ratio as the diameter decreases. Thus if the particle is small enough it may be that the light pressure would be greater than the attraction of gravitation. Profs. Nichols and Hull were able to push aside a stream of particles of fine powder falling through a vacuum by throwing upon it a strong beam of light. What good did this do? The astronomer knows that when a comet goes around the sun it is very polite, and keeps its tail behind it, away from the sun, or at least seems to try to do so. No satisfactory explanation of this phenomenon had ever been found until the above observations suggested that possibly the particles constituting the tail of the comet are so small that the light pressure of the sun drives them away from the sun, and it is only the combined attraction of the sun and comet head that prevents them from dissipation in space. It is fairly well established that at least in many cases the tails of comets are made up of separate particles and are not gaseous like nebulae. This series of conclusions is a good example of the general principle that a real advance in any one direction in science invariably brings with it a crop of more or less unexpected results in very divergent lines of research.

Newton announced that every particle of matter attracts every other particle of matter with a force which is proportional to the product of the two masses and inversely to the square of their distance apart. It is of course this force which makes objects on the surface of the earth "weigh." Their weight is a measure of this force of mutual attraction between the earth and the object. The question was naturally asked whether the attraction between objects upon the surface of the earth could be measured. For example, two suspended weights must be drawn toward each other by their mutual attraction; can their displacement be measured?

Cavendish was able to demonstrate the existence of this attraction between suspended masses, and thus verified Newton's law for small bodies and small distances. Since his day the possibilities of measurement have so greatly improved that in the skilful hands of Prof. C. V. Boys an instrument has yielded measurements representing forces about the thousandth part of those measured by Nichols and Hull, and indeed Dr. Pegram of Columbia showed as a lecture experiment the mutual attraction of two balls smaller than peas.

Thus it is that the fields of science are being constantly gleaned, and almost daily do the improved methods result in the discovery of some interesting and important fact which has till now slipped through the fingers of the workers. It is a safe proposition that the advancement of science is directly proportional to the delicacy and accuracy of its measurements, and indeed it may be claimed that the advancement of civilization is in direct proportion to the accuracy of physical measurements.

dence of the breadth and almost infinite variety of this many-sided man. From the medals he quickly turned, however, to show me the four folios of Shakespeare, Burke's own copy of Paine's "Age of Reason," and Charles I.'s own copy of Smith's "Generall Historie of Virginia." Mr. Ivins is a collector, and a fortunate one. Among his treasures are some of the articles of dining room furniture presented to Daniel Webster by Lord Ashburton and dispersed with Webster's other effects.

The contemplation of these precious objects suggested a question. "Mr. Ivins, with all these beautiful things about you, with your walls lined to the ceiling with books that I know you love, with a big law office downtown, and with your personal inclinations disposing you, as I know they do, to the pleasures of reading and study, why did you accept the Republican nomination for Mayor?" This was Mr. Ivins's reply:

"You ask me my reasons for giving up a life of ease and of purely business occupation to accept the nomination for the Mayoralty. Having been opposed to Tammany Hall all of my political life, it seemed to me that there was a likelihood that the election might go by default, without a proper presentation to the people of the true issues and without a realization by the people of the danger in which I believe it stands. I sincerely believe the administration of Mayor McClellan to have been a more than ordinarily bad one because he has so perfectly succeeded in eluding criticism and in not being held to rigid responsibility for acts of omission which in many cases have been even greater and worse than any possible acts of commission. Our municipal departments, in my opinion, have never been in a worse state of disorganization, and the attitude of Tammany Hall in the matter of public franchises is fraught, I believe, with the greatest dangers to the community. It was precisely to present these considerations to the public, to endeavor to offer an intelligent and determined opposition, which is a necessary and essential part of a representative system of government, that I accepted the nomination, independent of any personal desire for election. I felt that it was a duty to my friends, to my fellows, and to myself; so I accepted, without fear of the consequences, in a spirit of complete independence, and in the hope, in any event, of creating the condition whereby every elector would be enabled to cast his vote intelligently on election day. In the event of my election, I believed and believe that I can serve the city, and in the event of my defeat, I felt and feel that I can still serve it through consolidating what will be a thoroughly well-organized and a thoroughly intelligent opposition, which will hold the administration to the strictest accountability under the light of the most piercing publicity. These were my reasons, and I can't help feeling that they are ample." A. A. Z.

President Roosevelt's Many New York Homes

Celebration of His Natal Anniversary in His Birth House Next Friday Recalls His Frequent Change of Domicile on Manhattan Island.

THE Roosevelt Home Club was organized on ths 12th of October, 1904, by several admirers of the President. Next Friday, Oct. 27, is Mr. Roosevelt's forty-seventh birthday, and the club will celebrate it by giving a banquet, to which the President has been invited, at the house, 28 East Twentieth Street, in the room in which he was born. The club intends to preserve the house and maintain it as a National landmark. It is at present given over to business, and a hideous bow window has painfully altered its appearance.

Theodore Roosevelt, the President's father, who is still remembered by New Yorkers as a man of affairs, a philanthropist, and a genial companion, lived most of the time at Oyster Bay; but he kept a house in the city, and his face was a familiar one about town. Indeed, since the arrival in New Amsterdam of Claes Martenven Van Roosevelt in 1650, the family has been constantly and intimately connected with the city's life. For the most part they lived the lives of simple and frugal Dutch burghers, regularly attending the Reformed Dutch Church, and actively engaged in trade. From time to time they made modest excursions into politics. One of the President's direct ancestors associated himself with the Leisbrian, or popular party, in its struggle against the tyranny of James II. This worthy burgher's occupation, we learn from the records, was that of a "bolter," a vocation he did not hand down to his illustrious descendant, who never "bolted" anything. The President's line remained purely Dutch till the sixth generation, marrying into Dutch families only. James Roossvelt, the President's great-grandfather, gave his services without reward as Commissary to the Continental Army during the entire War of Independence. Isaac Roosevelt, a collateral ancestor, took a prominent part in the Provincial Congress which organized the State of New York. The family allied itself strongly with the patriot cause. Probably the most famous of the eighteenth century Roosevelts was Nicholas J., the inventor, who was one of the first to make steam navigation by means of the vertical paddlewheel a success.

The President's grandfather, Cornelius Van Schaak Roosevelt, was a successful merchant and glass importer, and laid the foundations of the Roosevelt fortune. His city home, since pulled down, stood on the southwest corner of Broadway and Fourteenth Street. It was a spacious, nearly square, white marble and red brick mansion. It was built in the late thirties, and stood until the ground became too valuable for residential purposes. Here it was that the Roosevelt clans gathered for family reunions, and "Teddy" as a youngster frequently played in his grandfather's back yard.

Theodore Roosevelt, Sr., was in business with his father and inherited a considerable property. His city home, 28 East Twentieth Street, was in a location respectable, though not "swell." Here he lived till 1873, when be moved into a house built for him by Mr. Russell Sturgis, 6 West Fifty-seventh Street, far up town then. The house next door, No. 4, was occupied by his brother, James Alfred Roosevelt.

The President's early life, therefore, was passsd in East Twentieth Street, not far from his grandfather's. Theodore was a delicate boy, and was not sent to the public schools. He was tutored at home, and for a while attended Cutler's School. In 1875, when the family was living in Fifty-seventh Street, he entered Harvard, and for several years was but rarely in the city. His vacations were spent in the country and in traveling. His father died in 1878, but Mrs. Roosevelt continued to live in Fifty-seventh Street till her death, in 1884.

It was here that the President lived when as a young man just out of college he entered the arena of New York politics in 1881 as candidate for the New York Assembly in the Twenty-first District, a part of the town strongly Republican. Some years ago Mr. Roosevelt, growing reminiscent of his entrance into politics, observed:

"I have always believed, and do yet, that a man should join a political organization and should attend the primaries; that he should not be content to be governed, but should do his part in tho work. So, upon leaving college, I went to the local political headquarters, attended all the meetings, and took my part in whatever was up. There came a revolt against the member of the Assembly from that district, and I was nominated to succeed him, and was elected."

He was re-elected to the Legislature in 1883, and his activity there as a reformer and anti-machine man is well known.

In 1883 Mr. Roosevelt, having married, moved to 55 West Forty-fifth Street, a modest New Brunswick brownstone house, where he lived only one year. This was the time when the State Republican Convention sent the young Assemblyman to the Republican National Convention at Chicago which nominated James G. Blaine for the Presidency. Mr. Roosevelt went uninstructed, but in favor of the nomination of Senator Edmunds. He did not sulk in his tent, however, nor did he join the forces of George William Curtis and the Mugwumps, but decided it was better to stick to the party and the party nominee.

In 1884 Mr. Roosevelt moved to 422 Madison Avenue, where he lived two years, during which time he took an active part in municipal affairs and was nominated for Mayor of the city on the Republican ticket, running against Abram S. Hewitt and Henry George. He was absent from the city much during these years on the Dakota ranch which he had just bought. In 1886 he moved his city home a little further up town, to 689 Madison Avenue, where he continued to live till 1897. His residence here, the longest he has yet been allowed to have, comprised the part of his life when he was writing history and acting as Civil Service and Police Commissioner. Mr. Roosevelt evidently considered this more permanently his home than any other of the city houses he has occupied. The dining room, which is still as he left it, was fitted up and decorated according to his own notions. In the Spring of 1897, Mr. Roosevelt, as is well known, was called to Washington by President McKinley to be Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and gave up his New York home. Since this time he has kept no house in the city.

BULLOCH HALL, WHERE PRESIDENT'S MOTHER LIVED.

THE village of Roswell, Cherokee County, Ga., awakes to find itself famous. President Roosevelt stopped there for a few hours on his present Southern tour to visit the place where his mother spent her girlhood, to see the house in which she lived in her young days, to stand reverently in the room she used as a girl and the rooms in which she was married, a parlor and a drawing room with folding doors, which were thrown open to make one room for the occasion.

Fifty years ago, pretty Martha Bulloch came and went among the young men and maidens of Roswell, a care-free, happy, young girl with no thought of potentialities of time, place, and personality. One day there came along one Theodore Roosevelt, a citizen of New York, who gathered to himself this Cherokee rose. And to-day the President of the United States, another Theodore Roosevelt, probably the first citizen of all the world, halts in his triumphal Southern tour at that same little wayside village to visit the home of his mother.

Bulloch is an honored name in Georgia. Archibald Bulloch, one of the President's maternal ancestors, was Georgia's first Revolutionary Governor. Bulloch County was so named in his honor. "Archie" Roosevelt, one of the boys in the White House, bears the name of that illustrious forebear.

The former home of Martha Bulloch, at Roswell, is still known as Bulloch Hall, and is the pride of the hamlet. After the war it passed out of the Bulloch family and was owned by a Mr. Wood, who changed the name to Woodhurst. It is now owned and occupied by J. B. Wing, who has restored the old name. Its great white columns supporting the high-roofed veranda in Colonial style give it an imposing appearance; the carriage drive curving up to the doorway hints of former grandeur. The President saw the place in Autumnal glory. Bordering the driveway are great oak trees glowing like rubies in the October sunlight. A few rugged cedars give a sombre touch. Here and there young maples give a dash of scarlet. There was no procession for the President at Roswell, but nature lifted high many a flaming banner.

Roswell has only a few thousand inhabitants, a muddy stream, and a cotton factory. The Chattahoochee River at that point is shallow and full of rapids, but it is dammed up and made to do good service for the factory. Also there is the old Presbyterian Church, where the President's mother taught Sunday school, and where the same old sexton—a former slave in the Bulloch family—now rings the bell who rang it in her time.

Three persons now in Roswell remember the President's mother—Mrs. W. E. Baker (Miss Evelyn King) and two old family servants, "Uncle William Jackson" and "Mom Grace."

Mrs. Baker still lives at Roswell, at Barrington Hall, one of the finest estates in that part of the country. She remembers "Mittie" Bulloch affectionately and admiringly, and it was her wish to have the President, as the son of her old friend, breakfast with her on the morning of his visit to Roswell; but he declined on account of his short stay in that place.

Mrs. Baker, hale and hearty at 69, looks not more than 50 years of age. She enjoys talking of "Mittie" Bulloch, recalling with emiss the details of the wedding, at which she was bridesmaid. She tells of the other bridesmaids—Miss Julia Hand, Miss Margaret Cooper Stiles, and Miss Anna Bulloch, an older sister of the bride and afterward Mrs. Gracie of New York. The groomsmen were Cornelius Roossvelt, a brother of the bridegroom; Thomas King, Ralph King, and Stewart Elliott, a half-brother of the bride.

Miss Baker tells how Bulloch Hall looked at that wedding—the four immense rooms on the first floor decked with mistletoe and smilax, and wax candles placed everywhere in many-branched candelabra. Great log fires glowed in all the big fireplaces. The bride wore a gown covered with tulle, with handsome lace trimming, and made with a long train, a full tulle veil covering all. The bridesmaids wore white muslins fashioned with full skirts and deep-pointed girdles.

"There was no wedding journey," said Mrs. Baker. "Instead, there were seven days of merry-making for all the bridal party here at Roswell. The Dunwoodys, the Lewises, the Kings, (my own family, you know,) kept open house, and one frolic followed another for the entire week. Then we told 'Mittie' good-bye, and she left us for her Northern home. Twice she was welcomed back on short visits—but the last visit was years and years ago."

"Uncle William," the old family servant, is a character in Roswell.

"Remember Miss Mittie?" he said, looking up from his seat on the woodpile near his house in the little village. "I reckon I does 'member! Pretty? Dey couldn't be mads prettier! She was dat fine and winsome and smilin' dat ever'body love her. And dat man what come down here fum de North—didn' have no easy time gittin' her. She was de belle o' dis colony. He handsome? No, ma'am, he warn't! He warn't no taller'n Miss Mittie, an' ugly—downright ugly!

"Remember what Miss Mittie wore at de weddin'? No'm. I can't 'member dat. I 'member I had to pull back de do' for de weddin' party. Day all look mighty fine. An' I 'member de banket table loaded down with ever'thing anybody could eat: an' I 'member all the dancin' an' frolickin' fur a week arter de weddin', and de fox buntin' and drivin' all roun' de country. Yss'm, dere was a lot o' people here. Mister Roosevelt's ma and pa and big brother all come ter de wedding. Yes'm, I sho was glad to see Miss Mittie's son when he coms to Roswell last Friday."

But the one most enthused in the coming of the Nation's chief to Roswell was "Mom Grace," who was maid to Mittie Bulloch before her marriage. "Mom Grace" is a real old-time darky in every sense of the word. She still wears her 'kerchief on her head, and always courtesies when she meets you and says: "How do, Massa." "Mom Grace" is 74 years old, but still is very active for one of her age. She lives on a little farm out near Roswell given her by President Roosevelt's mother and Mrs. West, an aunt of the President. "Mom Grace" likes to talk of her "little missus," and never tires of telling about when she married. She describes Miss Mittie's dress as a handsome white silk, made Princess fashion, with a long train, and a veil that reached to the bottom of the train, and tells how small her feet looked in the little white slippers with their big buckles. She likes to tell also how the old hall was illuminated with many lights, and of the flowers and vines used in the decorations, and will say: "I tell you, Massa, it was a grand time when Miss Mittie married."

Some time ago "Mom Grace" was asked if she was going to coms to see President Roossvelt on the morning of the 20th, and she said: "Who? Me? I sho is, Massa; I'se gwine to see Miss Mittie's boy, I sho is." The Nation's chief is only Miss Mittie's boy to "Mom Grace."

NUISANCES OF THE THEATRE.

"SOME day," said the confirmed theatregoer, "I'm going to write a book on theatre nuisances I have met. And it'll be a volume easily visible to the naked eye, too, you can bet.

"I don't believe there's any other place where so many pests are gathered together at any one time as in the average theatre. Of course, everybody has suffered from the fat man who sits in the middle of the row and insists on walking over everybody's feet on his way out and back between each act. Nobody who weighs over two hundred ought to be allowed to have anything but aisle seats, anyhow, but the fat man is an old nuisance. So, too, is the sort of pest that comes to the theatre to have a nice cozy chat. It wasn't so very long ago when the occupants of the boxes considered themselves privileged to talk as much and as loudly as they pleased, regardless of the rights of others. But that day has long passed, even at the Opera. The plain citizen in the orchestra chair soon shuts up the talkers nowadays.

"But there are a number of theatre pests less known to fame, but whom nearly every theatregoer must some time have met. There, for example, is the man who has seen the play before and has now brought his best girl to see it. Half the time he goes on something like this:

"'You see the man with the monocle, don't you, dear? Well, he's in love with the red-headed girl only he's too bashful to tell her so. Oh, he's awfully amusing—really'.

"'He is funny, ain't he?' says the best girl. 'Does she ever find out that he loves her?'

"'Sure thing,' replies Mr. Knowitall, 'she knows it without his telling her and finally she gets him into a corner and just fairly scares it out of him.'

"And so it goes; you hear all about it before it happens. That fellow doesn't leave you a moment of suspense in the whole play. You know beforehand that the blonde lady with the asthmatic giggle is going to put poison in the paralytic husband's soup, that the farmer boy in the first act is going to New York to be a policy king or a life insurance President and will come back in the last act to raise the mortgage on the old farm and marry the sweetheart of his youth. You pay your good money to come in and let the author tell you all about it in an artistic manner, and here you get it in lumps beforehand from Mr. Knowitall.

"Then there's the caramel fiend—not always a woman, by any means. I've sat beside the male caramel fiend three times now and I'm good and tired of him. He always waits until a moment of breathless suspense on the stage. Then he reaches into his crackly candy bag and rattles around for a confection. And when he's not rattling the bag he's cracking his jaws.

"But I really think the stolid theatregoer is the worst of all. It may be because I have a peculiarly sympathetic disposition, but nothing irritates me so much as to be thoroughly amused at some doing or speech on the stage and then happen to glance away for a moment only to have my eyes fall on a countenance that looks as if it were hewn from a piece of the old apple tree. I don't see what such people go to the theatre for, anyhow. Of course, I don't mean that I want people to double up into bow knots when they're amused or to split their sides with laughter, but I do want 'em to show in some way that they understand what's going on. Many a time I've changed my seat in the middle of a sprightly performance because I couldn't stand the wooden Indian face next me.

"The fellow who's got a friend in the cast is a pretty tough proposition, too. He lets out a howl of delight every time his favorite turns his hand over. This is bad enough when he, or she, as is generally the case, turns out to be clever, but when the favorite is worse than mediocre it gets on your nerves after a while.

"Then there is the New Jersey contingent. They have to rush out in the middle of the last act to catch the last train. This is particularly annoying just as the heroine is at her apparently last gasp and the efforts of the hero to rescue her from death by fire or flood or automobile are seemingly in vain and you are wondering how the deuce the ingenuity of the author is going to respond to the terrific demand upon it. They say that when the new Hudson River tunnels are all complete New Jersey will be as near as Harlem. Well, three cheers for the diggers, say I. They will make more peaceful the apparently last hours of many a heroine and her yearning friends in the audience."

After all, a castle in the air needs no plumber.

NEW ATTRACTIONS AT THE "ZOO."

(See Pictorial Section.)

TO the already large number of animals on exhibition in the Zoological Park in the Bronx there have been recently added several of which the Director of the park is justly proud. Among these may be mentioned the African elephant Congo, the first one the society has owned; an Australian echidna, one of the family of ant eaters, and a pair of crested screamers from South America. Congo is a gift to the Zoological Society from Charles T. Barney, and represents the third attempt to secure an elephant from Africa, the two former ones that were captured having died before they could be brought to this city.

The echidna, which is represented in an intimate attitude in the picture in the supplement, may be seen in the small Mammal House in the Park. They are restless little animals and are possssed of an unusual degree of strength, as this pose would indicate. The screamers are among the most curious birds known to naturalists owing to the curious contrasts of their characters. Although they have four long sharp spurs on each of their wings as weapons of attack or defense, they readily associate with domestic fowls and are used by the natives as a source of protection of their fowls, for the screamers frighten away all hawks or other predatory birds. In the latest issue of the Bulletin of the society the Director calls attention to the fact that the West Farms terminal of the Subway is only two blocks away from the entrance to the park, which is now in its most picturesque garb.

Ethical Culture Society Thirty Years Old To-day

Dr. Felix Adler's Remarkable Career and Personality--Purposes of His Work --Democratic Spirit Dominates His School--A Man with a Mission.

WHEN the Society for Ethical Culture gathers this morning in Carnegie Hall it will have passed its three decades of organization. Thirty years of ethical culture in New York means thirty years of ethical culture in the United States and in Europe, for this movement originated in America. It began in the Centennial year of 1876, and the spirit of patriotism then firing so many activities gave its color to this religion also in which the ethical factor is the basic principle. Thus was fulfilled Emerson's prophecy of "a new ethical religion and ethical church in America."

The Society for Ethical Culture in New York, soon to erect a fine church building adjoining the School for Ethical Culture, Central Park West, is the largest concrete example of the fulfillment, Chicago, Philadelphia, and St. Louis following closely in importance. Each of these societies will be represented in the International Congress for Ethical Culture to be held in London next Summer.

The speaker before the New York society this morning, the opening session for the season, will be the man who most frequently occupies the platform, he who founded the society thirty years ago, and through whose influence and active work as an organizer England, Germany, Austria, and Italy have one after another joined the international movement.

Felix Adler—educator, reformer, writer, lecturer—is as a teacher of ethics the essence of all these types. Pre-eminently a moral leader, it is as such that the ethical movement crystallizes his beliefs and teachings.

The membership list and the number of Ethical Culture Societies by no means stand for the hold ethical culture, so defined, has taken on the world. Lacking sensational features, being concerned only with two final purposes—self-development and the betterment of others—omitting creed as a necessity, ethical culture is remarkable as much for the wide intelligence and common sense of its members as for their number. Yet the idea of beauty as existent in morality confers on this reasonable faith more vividness of attraction than is commonly understood by the layman. And its supporters are as frequently found among the so-called unintellectual and unschooled as among the highly educated.

Dr. Adler is one of those continually occupied men who yet seem always to have time to do the extra thing desired of them. A professor in Columbia, a teacher in the Ethical Culture School, the working leader of the Ethical Culture Society, a man of the most diversified interests, he is yet not in a hurry. He took time to give some of his own deductions about the movement so primarily his own.

"What has ethical culture accomplished? Setting aside statistics and answering the question solely from the viewpoint of essence back of the statistics, it has proved that the passing away of forms does not affect the validity of the spiritual life. It has proved that the will for self-development and duty to others as articles of organization are sufficient to hold large groups of people together in the relations of a church in which individual belief is considered neither a bar nor a recommendation. The growing life of the Ethical Culture Society, its many practical demonstrations of sincere and well-purposed philanthropy and its constant endeavor to construct rather than destroy, and instead merely of adding a new religion to the many already existing, to live in the moral current common to all, has commended it to the orthodox and unorthodox alike.

"As striking a change," continued Dr. Adler, "as I notice in the relation of the world at large to ethical culture now and when I founded the society is this: We were once looked upon as a company of avowed atheists, and that idea did much to harm us. To-day there is no such misconception. We have demonstrated by our membership and by our words and actions, I think, that perfect intellectual freedom in the moral and religious life is our main tenet. We welcome all morally aspiring persons, irrespective of theological or metaphysical opinions, believer and unbeliever, alike. Far rarer each year are instances of failure on the part of the public to understand our position in this particular."

"The churches!" Dr. Adler readily complied with the suggestion that he speak of their relation to the Ethical Culture Society and that of the society to them. "More and more cordial relations exist between us. The Bishop of Hereford in England recently stated that the work of the society should be made supplementary to that of the churches. We would not stipulate 'supplementary,' for obviously we look on ourselves as a church founded on the essentials of spirituality. But we recognize in the welcoming spirit of the churches their liberal and sincere impulse toward a more all-embracing religion. The churches bind themselves to believe in the future what they believe to-day. We cannot consider this logical, because no man knows what he shall believe in the future. We bind ourselves to nothing save the acceptance of certain elementary moral truths. We unite in order to add to them, because we believe that moral truth is progressive, can be increased in the world, and that it is our duty to contribute to that increase and sustain one another in attempts to live up to the principles we believe to be right."

The career of such a man as Dr. Adler is always interesting in its details. One wonders what influences fostered the controlling principle that produced so powerful a life. Dr. Adler was educated for the work of a Jewish rabbi. He went abroad in 1870 and took his Ph. D. in Germany, studying at the University of Berlin. He had previously been graduated from Columbia University in the class with Seth Low and other men destined to take an important part in New York's future life. On returning to the United States in 1873 Dr. Adler went to Cornell as professor, teaching chiefly at that time the history of religions. Europe had shown him that his idea of religion was too universalistic, strictly speaking, and in the wider sense to be bound by the teachings of the orthodox Jewish faith.

Dr. Adler left Cornell in 1876 and came to New York, his permanent field of work. Inspired doubly by the depth of his religious conception and by the big spirit of that year commemorating our independence, Dr. Adler thus began his direct instruction in ethical culture. It developed in two main currents, schools and platform. Pre-eminently a moral leader, it is as such that the ethical movement crystallizes his beliefs and teachings.

Of the latter the Society for Ethical Culture became the instrument. Out of it grew the Ethical Culture School, to-day occupying a singularly well-appointed building on Central Park West, the society being the financial backer of the school. The society's tenets, practically applied in the school, make concrete Dr. Adler's principle that there should be no differentiation between religious and secular education.

Although Dr. Adler's name is most immediately associated with moral education on Sundays and week days, he has been distinguished in many lines of social reform and public affairs. He was the inspiration of the Tenement House Commission in 1884 that led to the erection of model tenements; he was also a leading member of the Committee of Fifteen, was Chairman of the National Committee on Child Labor, has been frequently concerned in arbitration between capital and labor is a founder of social settlements, and a profound sympathizer with all peace movements.

The Ethical Culture School is a practical demonstration on his part of the educational principles applied to children and youth that he teaches to older people at Columbia University and to the general public at Carnegie Hall on Sunday mornings.

This school is as nearly perfect in all external appointments as modern knowledge can make it. Its standards for teachers and students have put it practically in the position of model school to the entire country. There is no other like it. It has a fine roof playground looking out over Central Park, its attractive library, its well-equipped gymnasium, its admirable lunch system, its hand work of various sorts, its system of art and musical training—these are, mentioning them at random, features that invariably attract the visitor. In the near future there will be a night school for young men, thus extending to yet another large group of people the benefits of the institution.

But it is the spirit of the school that differentiates it. It is splendidly democratic! Rich children and poor, those who can pay and those who attend on scholarships, of which there are a great number, sit side by side. And they will continue to do so as long as the school exists, for it is no affair of class and clase distinctions, and it is co-educational aa to sex and race.

The school, beautiful to-day in so many ways, grew out of a little "workingman's" school that Dr. Adler began in the "gas district" twenty-seven years ago. His free kindergarten there was the first free kindergarten in New York. The Ethical Culturists and pioneers are not only in unsectarian moral education, but in free kindergartens and in manual training.

Thus at the beginning of its fourth decade the school and the society stand for the progress of that conception of democracy on which the American people became a Nation. Dr. Adler, the soul of the Ethical Culture movement, in his spoken utterances and in such of his books as "Life and Destiny," "The Religion of Duty," and "The Essentials of Spirituality," has made of his deep beliefs a concrete and simple religion. Lacking all vagueness, it stands to-day in form to attract as its followers great numbers of the thoughtful people who are without church associations, but who, if candid, will admit that organization in moral life as in business—if one may make such a division—is the source of increased power.

ONE REASON FOR THE PREVALENCE OF DIVORCE IN THIS COUNTRY

THE MAN WITH THE EYE-GLASSES was in a good humor. You could see that by the melancholy droop of the corners of his mustache. And when the Man with the Eye-Glasses was in a good humor he would talk. His talk was usually worth listening to.

"I've been thinking," this was the way he usually began, "I've been thinking about this matter of divorce."

"Yes?"

"I mean about the cause of it. The undeniable prevalence of divorce in this country is greatly distressing some patriotic souls. Because, you know, when we sing of ourselves in the concert of the nations, one of the chief things on which we pride ourselves is the purity of our home and social life. Therefore it is rather sad to have to acknowledge the alarming increase of divorce in a nation thus glorified. Therefore, also, the worry of the patriotic souls and much newspaper talk. All sorts and kinds of causes have been sought for to explain things. But to my mind the chief cause has not yet been mentioned, although it is a cause that could be freely cited without endangering our National moral reputation."

"Indeed! How interesting! And what is that cause?"

The Man with the Eye-Glasses gazed into space as one who sees visions.

"That cause is," he murmured softly with prophetic conviction, "that cause is—the American breakfast."

The listener gasped. The Man with the Eye-Glasses enjoyed the sensation he had made and continued with gracious condescension.

"Why, yes, don't you see * * * a majority of the writers and speakers on the subject agree that the disease known as Americanitis * * * the restless discontent and nervous irritability peculiar to our quick-living Nation * * * has very much to do with the prevalence of divorce, Americanitis being a disease which usually makes the victim turn against those nearest and dearest to him. And the American breakfast is undoubtedly one of the strongest causes for Americanitis.

"The American breakfast is a barbarity—I had almost said. Only a barbarian is capable of anything so foolish. The savage, living in a state of nature, sleeps, then works, then eats, and then sleeps again. So does the animal that follows nature's laws instinctively, and the peoples of the elder earth throughout the history of civilization have tried to arrange their life as nearly as possible according to this schedule. They found it worked pretty well. But we Americans, with the intolerance of youth for the wisdom of age, think we know better. We reverse the process; we sleep, then eat, then work. The result is—our National diseases of indigestion and Americanitis.

"But I was talking about divorce, wasn't I? Well now, consider the matter a moment. The average American city-dweller, man or woman * * * divorce is most prevalent among city dwellers * * * works pretty hard as a rule, stays up rather late at night, and enjoys only a few hours of the heavy sleep of exhaustion. And this sleep is taken usually in small rooms, close with the heavy air of the city. Now the nations of an older growth know that the man living under such conditions, and awakening to face another strenuous day, needs the first hour of the morning to prepare himself, mind and body, for his toil. This can be done only by being alone to collect one's faculties in peace and quiet, and by taking some light refreshment, which is more of a stimulant than anything else. And which, moreover, can be taken as quietly as possible with no formality and with nothing about it to interrupt the process of awakening of mind and body for the daily needs.

"But what does the American do?—the American, acknowledged to be the most strenuous of all the workers. He gets up in a hurry, clothes himself completely—also in a hurry—in all the civilized discomforts of collar and boots, &c. Then he sits down at a formally—I had almost said formidably—set table, waits ceremoniously until all the family are assembled, scolds those who are late, (scolding takes such a lot of nervous energy,) and then he proceeds to hastily take unto himself a heavy three-course dinner. The consequence is that when he starts out for his day's work he is actually, mentally, and physically in a fit condition to go to bed again. The half-awakened body needs at least two hours to digest the heavy meal for which it was in nowise prepared; and the half-awakened mind is already unconsciously fatigued by that most nerve-straining of all exercises, the conversation of the family table.

"Of course, while a man is young, or in the prime of his early maturity, his physical being can overcome the strain of all this, but it tells on his nerves. Any engineer will tell you that if, as a matter of daily practice, you throw a full head of steam into cold pipes, your engine will wear out very soon. And the human mind and body are the most delicate of all machines. The man has to pull himself together for his work, but when he comes home at night he is bound to let go sometimes.

"It's the same way with a woman; a woman needs more sleep than a man, anyway, and the first two or three morning hours are very busy ones for the head of the house and mother of a family. She has a hundred things to think of that must all be thought of at once within a short time. What wonder, then, if during the strained formality with which her heavy morning meal is eaten, an inadvertent word will sometimes call forth a sharp answer from her tired, half-awakened brain. There is no time to recall it, as the work of the day claims both. The hurt rankles during the hours of separation, and if anything unpleasant has happened to either during the day, the meeting at night is only too apt to be a renewal of the quarrel of the morning.

"It is out of just such little family quarrels as this that the discord grows, which becomes in time unconquerable and leads to divorce. If the real truth could come out it would be found that the so-called serious causes for divorce are in the minority. If I may digress a moment, I would say that the most ideally courteous and loving husband I have ever known was a man who systematically and regularly deceived his wife, even in her own house. She was an absolutely happy woman, and there was never a cross word between them. Their family life was really beautiful, and this woman was envied by many of her friends whose husbands' loyalty was undeniable, but whose family table was far more often enlivened by quarrels than by anything else. This is a digression, but I merely wanted to show that, in my opinion, the quarrel leads more often to the divorce than does infidelity. And I have already said that, in my opinion, it is the American breakfast that causes most of the quarrels.

"I think it is Kipling who lets one of his heroes deliberately give his wife every possible cause for divorce, simply because he couldn't endure seeing the same face at table opposite him three times a day. If he had seen it only once, or, at the most, twice a day, at a meal when both were ready to enjoy the good things before them, he might not have found that face so unendurable. The moral is plain.

"The English are almost as bad as we are in demanding the ceremonious morning meeting which is such a strain on the temper. But they are not quite so particular in having all the family and guests there at the exact moment—and they do not eat hot meat. The hot meat is the last straw that breaks the camel's back. It would be comic were it not so tragic in its effects.

"The so-called European breakfast is becoming somewhat more of a habit in our larger cities, but it is still combined with far too great a ceremony of formal gathering around a table. Let it become a matter of choice and not of compulsion if the husband and wife shall meet over the morning coffee; let those who desire it have that precious hour of solitude and repose to collect the thoughts for the day—and even our strenuous American life will not produce quite so many victims of incurable dyspepsia or of Americanitis. And I don't think there will be so many divorces.

"I may be mistaken, but I think it's worth trying." Here the Man with the Eye-Glasses lit a fresh cigarette, which signified that he was done talking and wished to meditate.

A LEAF FROM THE BOOK OF TRUTH---WHITE LIES NECESSARY

THE woman who pledged herself to speak the truth on all occasions was fagged out after a trying day.

"John," she said to h husband after having gazed int vacancy for a quarter of an hour, "it s almost necessary to lie, isn't it? That is, it is better to refrain from speaking the truth on all occasions; perhaps that would be the better way to put it."

"Why?" asked her husband, wondering whence had come the cargo for this train of thought.

"Well, the other day I fell to thinking of the numberless petty lies we women tell every day, and the far higher self-esteem that would come from truth and candor."

"Yes," assented her husband.

"And I registered a mental pledge to tell the truth at all times, and to refrain from the nasty little fibs we think we have to tell."

"Well?"

"You see, my pledge took effect this morning, and the first person to come to the house after you left was that Holmes woman."

"I'm listening."

"She wanted us to come to a card party, an informal affair, she said; and the way she slobbered over me made me crawl. Slobber is the only word that expresses it, John. You know, I always did despise that woman, and it is only by the greatest effort that I can be civil to her. Ordinarily, I would have fibbed and told her how delighted we would be to come. But the passion for truth was on me, and as nearly as I can remember it, this is what I said: 'Mrs. Holmes, neither my husband nor I cares for you. We do not enjoy ourselves in your company, and we dislike to be under any obligation to you, for we must return it, and that we do not care to do.'"

John whistled—a long-drawn, contemplative whistle. "You were telling the truth for the family," he observed.

"It would not have been so bad, John, if I had stopped there, but when the truth started from my lips it seemed so good it overpowered my prudence. 'Your entertainments are always prosy,' I said, 'and you haven't a bit of tact in the world. You insist on inviting three or four couples who don't speak to each other, and expect to mix them around card tables and work out a complete scheme in social harmonies. Your refreshments are abominable and your guests poke fun at you behind your back. Your house always smells as if it didn't get an airing in a month, and I have a headache whenever I go there. So, if you please, John and I will not come.'"

"Don't you think you told a little more truth than was absolutely necessary?" asked her husband reflectively.

"I guess I did, John, but as I told you it got away from me. You should have seen her, John. She turned red and blue and white and green, and fairly choked with rage when she found I meant it. I told so much truth it hurt. She called me a jealous scold, and said she never wanted me, anyway, but always invited us because we had so few friends and went out so little. That was a stinger, wasn't it?"

"I can hear the echo of the hammers, now," was John's solitary comment. "About how far did this mania for truth carry you during the day? You might as well tell it all, now."

"Well, to go on; the Rev. Rosey dropped in about 11:30 o'clock. You know he always comes about the time you are trying hardest to do something, says he knows he's intruding, excuses himself every five minutes, and stays about three hours. He came to the door when I had both hands in pie dough, and I know he saw me wiping them on my apron. When I opened the door he said he knew his call was ill-timed, but he was passing, and could not resist the temptation to drop in."

"Then you said you were delighted to have him, and that if he would come in you would make a cup of tea for him?"

"Indeed, I did nothing of the sort. That passion for truth overcame me again, and I stood in the door without inviting him in. 'Rev. Prosey,' I said, 'I am busy making pies, and I know you saw me wiping the dough off my hands when I came to the door. If I should invite you in I would be guilty of deceit, for I do not want you. You would interfere with my domestic arrangements, and in my perturbed and irritated state of mind I do not believe any spiritual advice you might offer would fall on fertile soil. So I shall ask you to excuse me, and hereafter to time you calls more opportunely.'

"Touch-down for the laity," John said, dryly.

"The poor old soul looked so shocked and bewildered I was tempted to violate my pledge and go back to fibbing, but I stayed firm and shut the door as gently as I could, but no less decisively."

"The next propaganda?"

"This afternoon Mrs. Merrill brought that boy of hers over and planted herself for the usual two hours, while her infant destroyer should roam at large among my bric-à-brac. She has done that same thing, John, until she has worn my patience to a nervous frazzle. I don't know why people never appreciate the value of other people's things. They let their youngsters rage about like mad, and if you reprove them or attempt to check their impetuous destructiveness, you get a frosty cough and a "Come, Jack, I guess it is time for us to go," with the emphasis on the "us." Now Mrs. Merrill's boy has marred and broken all of my property I intend he shall, so when she came this afternoon I was all on edge to tell her a few truths."

"First act?"

"She said she couldn't stay a minute, and proceeded to take off all of her things and Jack's, and set him down right in front of that mahogany cabinet with the vases on it. Then she forgot all about him and untied her bundle of gossip for me to look at the patchwork. In the meantime Jack pulled down a Rookwood vase that mamma gave me, and broke it into a thousand pieces."

"Then you said it didn't matter, that it was a cheap little thing, and you didn't care for it anyway?" suggested John.

"Did I? Well, I don't recall it if I did. I said: 'Mrs. Merrill, that is about the tenth time that ill-reared child of yours has broken some one of my prized possessions. It isn't accidental, it's simon-pure, inexcusable inquisitiveness and ill-behavior. I am always glad to have you come here, but I don't like that boy of yours, and I don't think his bringing up reflects much credit on you as a mother. Unless you can teach him to keep his hands off my things, I shall ask you to leave him at home.'"

"About how high did the balloon go up?"

"She was torrid, I tell you. She snatched Jack up and kissed him—now imagine kissing a child who has done a trick like that!—and said if I would get their things for them it would probably be the last time I would have that pleasure, with the shading on the pleasure. Oh, but she was sour. She set my teeth all on edge with a glance, and the air tasted like acid. And she flounced out like an offended goddess, carrying that unruly child as if he were rare china."

"I can see where Mrs. Merrill doesn't track up the show on our front porch any more," mused John, reflectively. "Any more pages in the book of truth?"

"Mrs. Buzzell came in about 5 o'clock to ask me about a conservatory for Jane. John, I was honest as could be with her. I told her that Jane had no talent for music, but that she did have some for dressmaking and millinery, and that she would better make a good milliner or dressmaker of her than a poor pianist. There wasn't anything so awfully bad about that, was there?"

"Mrs. Buzzell struck the ceiling right there, near the chandelier?" he inquired.

"Whew! John, I was frightened. Did you ever see a quiet old hen ruffle up her feathers and attack a dog that was nosing about among her chickens? Well, John, she was Mrs. Quiet Hen. She flew at me all apraddled out, and said I didn't know a nocturne from a soup ladle. Yes, she did say nocturne, John, and you needn't laugh, for it wasn't funny a bit. I wish it had been you instead of me. Why, John, she would have scratched me, I do believe, she was so angry. 'After fifteen years of friendship,' she said, 'to have jealousy creep in and destroy it all, and you an old married woman, too!' She shot out like a gasoline explosion, and talked back at me for half a block while I was trying to explain."

"That's about three touch-downs and a field goal for the home team," observed John, thoughtfully. "Is that all?"

"I think that's all, John. There hasn't been anybody in since supper."

"We will pray together that no one comes," suggested John, dryly. "And to-morrow! Does the campaign of truth go on? Will the red flag of honesty wave in the public face?"

"I don't know, John," doubtfully.

"Did you ever hear of Alexander Selkirk, Mollie?" asked John, after a short pause.

"Why, yes. He was all alone somewhere, wasn't he?"

"Exactly! He was all alone somewhere. Do you pine for solitude and to be known as the female Alexander Selkirk?"

"Why, no. Certainly not!"

"Then this night we will call off the dogs of truth, and to-morrow morning, bright and early, the Social Fib will be restored to its former first place among the Lares and Penates, will it not?"

"Well, if you think it best. But there are a few other persons I would like to meet before—"

"There! There!" said John, putting his arm about her lovingly. J. W. FOLEY.

Five Years More May See Edgar Allan Poe Elected

Why He Failed to Reach the Hall of Fame This Year--His Strength and Weakness Among the Electors--An Analysis of the Recent Vote.

Deep into the darkness peering, long I stood there wondering, fearing,
Doubting, dreaming dreams immortals only dared to dream before;
Of the Hall of Fame is spoken, but the darkness was unbroken,
And the only words of token were the whispered words—once more!
Which I whispered, and an echo murmured back the words—once more!
On the howling Harlem shore.

YES, Edgar Allan Poe has stormed the University Heights once more and failed of feeling a welcome hand. No St. Peter was at the gate, just as there was none five years ago when the author of "The Raven" sought shelter the first time at the Hall of Fame. And why?

As bleakly announced by the Hall of Fame Senators, such being their honorarium, eleven new immortals were admitted a few days ago in the following order of election: John Quincy Adams, James Madison, John Paul Jones, Alexander Hamilton, James Russell Lowell, Louis Agassiz, John Greenleaf Whittier, William Tecumseh Sherman, Emma Willard, Mary Lyon, and Maria Mitchell.

Forsooth! say some impatiently. Bravo—encore! is exclaimed by others, who are asking in the same breath what is the matter with Poe, Patrick Henry, Bryant, Cooper, Wendell Phillips, Noah Webster, he of many words, if not deeds; Rufus Choate, Oliver Hazard Perry, Gens. Jackson and Sheridan, and others of the two hundred and eleven who likewise were weighed and found wanting?

Poe still out in the cold, and Winter on the hill! A few have been overheard saying: Well, so much the worse for a certain vacant niche in the New York University Temple, which England, with her Abbey, is disposed to dub the Hall of Worthies. They are warming themselves over the recollection of its being a distinction in France not to be membered in the Academy, and are predicting that in time perhaps it will be an honor not to be commemorated on the north shore of the howling Harlem. For, is ventured, just fancy an intelligent visitor, a century hence, surveying the semicircle of tablets approved by certain solemn Solons and marveling at the number of names whose erstwhile bearers had otherwise passed into oblivion!

Seeking an answer as to why Poe and other quasi-outcasts have been so tabooed, the writer was admitted to a special view of the records and everything pertaining to the election. Chancellor MacCracken said that the action of the Board of Electors needed no excuse. As for explanations, he pursued, an analysis of the balloting would supply them comprehensively.

Since May 1 these eminent critics, working or playing in various parts of the world, have been considering the merits and demerits of the 218 candidates for fame. According to the constitution, approved at the time Miss Helen Gould donated $250,000 for the Hall of Fame, the nominations addressed by the general public to Chancellor MacCracken were in turn submitted to the University Senate for seconding. All nominations seconded were then forwarded to the electors, the nominees representing fifteen classes—authors and editors, business men, educators, inventors, missionaries and explorers, philanthropists and reformers, preachers and theologians, scientists, engineers and architects, lawyers and Judges, musicians, painters and sculptors, physicians and surgeons, rulers and statesmen, soldiers and sailors, and persons outside the above classes.

Of the seventeen nominees among American authors, including George Bancroft, William Cullen Bryant, Cooper, George William Curtis, William Lloyd Garrison, Horace Greeley, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Francis Scott Key, Lowell, Parkman, Motley, Wendell Phillips, Poe, Prescott, Noah Webster, and Whittier, only Whittier and Lowell were chosen. Of the 58 votes, 51 being necessary to elect, cast for Lowell, 17 were cast by college Presidents, 18 by professors and scientists, 15 by publicists, and 3 by jurists. Bearing in mind that throughout the voting New England had 21 votes, the Middle States 23, the Middle West 19, the South 18, and the West 14, Lowell received 18 New England votes and only 4 Southern and 9 Western. Whittier received 15 from New England, 24 from the Middle and Middle West, and only 3 votes from the South.

And Poe? Of his 43 ayes, 5 more than he got five years ago, 8 were from New England, 17 from the Middle and Middle Western States, 13 out of a possible 18 from the South, and 5 out of 14 from the West. Ten college Presidents voted for him, 14 professors and scientists, 9 publicists and 10 out of 22 jurists, the jurists and members of his own craft defeating him. As he will be proposed five years hence, it is very likely that Poe will yet come into his own. As it is, he received the same number of votes as Cooper and three less than Bryant, Parkman, and Motley. Noah Webster, the dictionary dean, only got 32 yeas, and Greeley 34.

John Quincy Adams and James Madison, both defeated five years ago, received, respectively 58 and 56 glad hands, as compared with 12 votes for Thomas H. Benton, 11 for Blaine, 45 for Calhoun, 15 for De Witt Clinton, 8 for Edward Everett, 10 for Garfield, 45 for Patrick Henry, one less for Jackson, 28 for Sumner, and 25 for Seward, while Martin Van Buren was goose-egged.

Of twenty-three famous American teachers, including Lyman Beecher, Phillips Brooks, Timothy Dwight, Mark Hopkins, Adoniram Judson, memorialized on Washington Square, and Cotton Mather, none was welcomed into the fold. Phillips Brooks, with 40 votes, Mark Hopkins, with 38, and Matthew Simpson (?) with 29, camo the nearest of these candidates to election.

Glancing over the soldiers, Sherman, with 57 champions, was the only one in eighteen to be clapped on the shoulder. New England wanted him 17 times and the Middle and Western States 35 times. But the South? Only 5 out of 18 Dixie electors thought William Tecumseh was big enough. John C. Frémont, the great Pathfinder, was also goose-egged, while Zachary Taylor, Winfield Scott, Meade, and Porter only narrowly escaped the ignominious cipher.

Rufus Choate, with 31 votes, was the sole jurist in aix to receive any encouragement at all.

When the balloting on famous American women began, eight of the gentlemen electors put their tongues in their cheeks, smiled gallantly, a-hemmed, and declined to commit themselves. As a result Miss Mary Lyon, Emma Willard, and Maria Mitchell, three out of thirty-seven nominees, are in a class by themselves—feminine pioneers of fame, as so adjudged. What have they done to be so remembered? Well, Miss Willard gave her name to the Willard Institute at Troy, while Miss Lyon founded Mount Holyoke Seminary, and Maria Mitchell, besides being the first woman to receive an LL. D. from Columbia, was Professor of Astronomy at Vassar.

Perhaps other women who were turned down are some miles more widely known, such, for instance, as Louisa M. Alcott, who received 37 votes; Sarah M. Fuller, with 23; Helen Hunt Jackson, with 34; Emily Dickinson, with 3; Martha Washington, with 31, and Mary Washington, with 18, besides Charlotte Cushman, of histrionic recollection, and Pocahontas Rolfe, better known simply as Pocahontas, daughter of Powhatan. She got sixteen votes.

Just who, other than the three women electors, voted 25 times for Elias Howe, of sewing machine fame, was not divulged. Of thirty-two American scientists nominated none was elected. Of the 180 men supported, five were at one time connected with the New York University—Albert Gallatin, its first President; Valentine Mott, its founder, and Profs. John Draper, Alfred Vail, and Thomas Gallaudet.

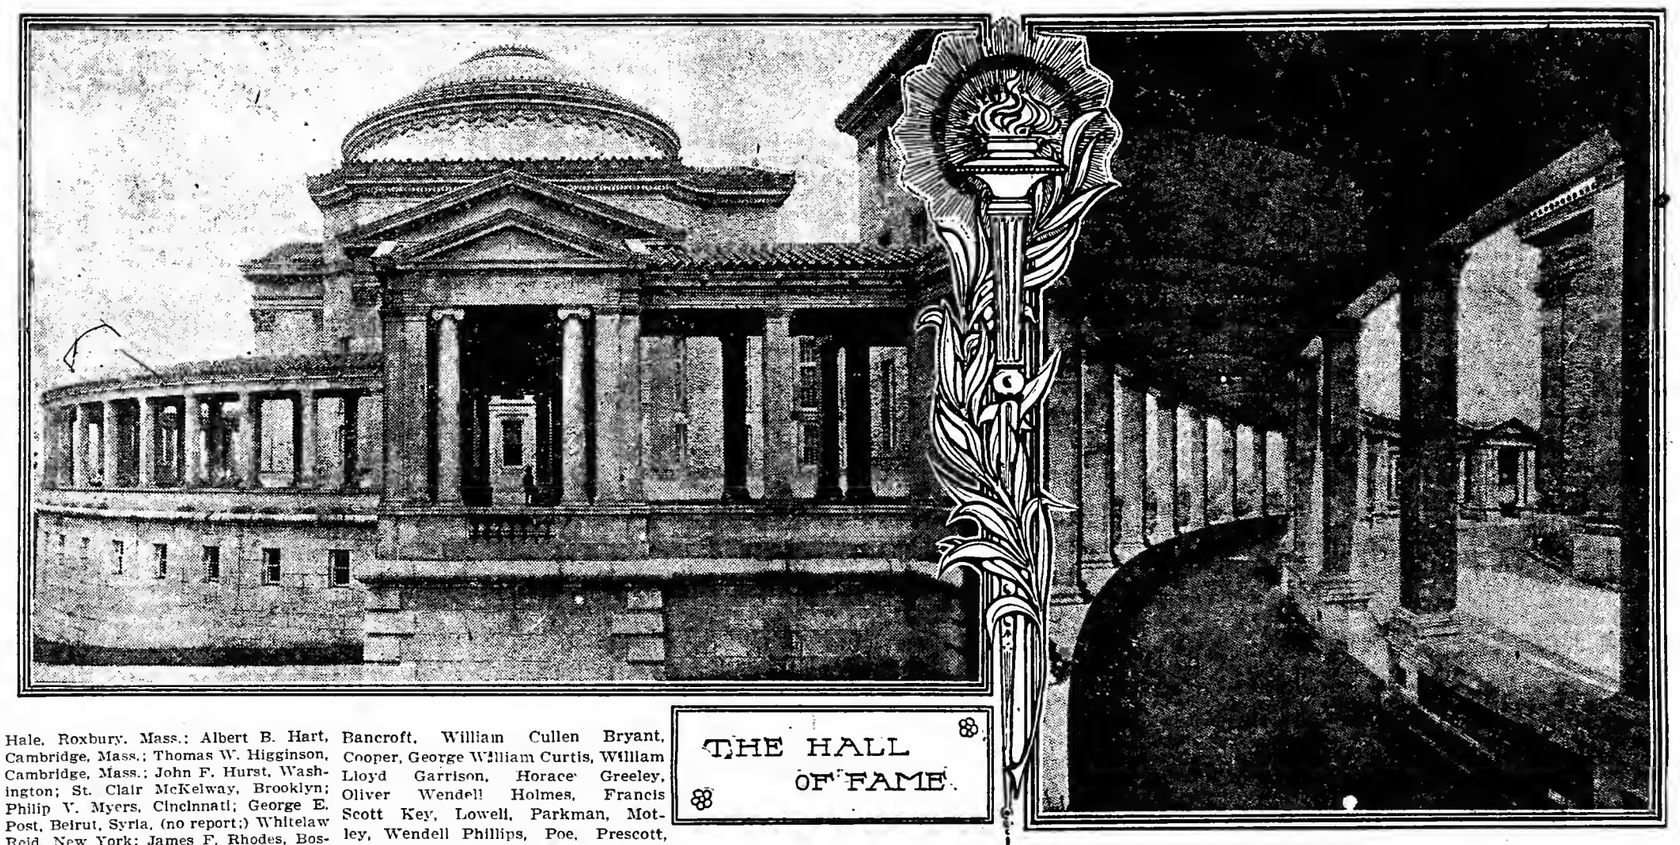
As Dr. MacCracken supplemented, none of the Hall of Fame entry rules has been so poorly remembered as the one which requires a candidate to have been a decade underground. All are agreed that the deceased only should be commemorated, and that a decade is none too short a period to weigh them in the scales. This, for instance, is why Whitman has never played the hornet in the electoral nest. Five years hence he will do so, and the gayety of nations will no doubt be awakened by the clatter of commendation and criticism. Just now Poe and the woman question are mainly adding to the fame of the Hall.

Yet, as the Chancellor observed, when a New York newspaper refers to it as an adjunct of Columbia University and prints an extended interview regarding it with President Butler, it appears that the general public is strangely befogged regarding the beautiful colonnade on University as distinguished from Morningside Heights.

What form, it may be asked, does the commemoration of the successful candidate take now that the Hall of Fame is a visible and tangible fact? Each man or woman thus canonized, so to say, is accorded a tablet or panel of stone properly engraved and imbedded in the parapets of the colonnade. On these tablets—there now being forty of them—the name, date of birth and of death, and an appropriate inscription are placed, as, for example:



THE HALL OF FAME.

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

1805—1882.

The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight;
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night.

The panels are distributed among the classes into which the names are divided, the authors' corner adjoining the Hall of Languages. This class now includes Emerson, Longfellow, Irving, Hawthorne, Lowell, Whittier. Next are the teachers and preachers—Edwards, Beecher, Channing, and Horace Mann. Further around the curve are the scientists and inventors—Audubon, Gray, Fulton, Morse, Agassiz, and Whitney. At the north end are the statesmen—Washington, Lincoln, Webster, Franklin, Jefferson, Hamilton, Clay, John Adams, J. Q. Adams, and James Madison. Adjoining are the jurists—Marshall, Kent, and Story. The soldiers and sailors, to the south, are Grant, Farragut, Paul Jones, Lee, and Sherman. The keystone of the colonnade, marked Septimi, is given over to a seventh division, comprising George Peabody, Peter Cooper, and Gilbert Stuart. Over each tablet, and resting on the ledge, will eventually be placed a full-length bronze statue of the honored dead.

On the ground floor of the Hall is a stately corridor, with five ample rooms, in which are preserved mementos of the famous ones—portraits, busts, autographs, and other vivid reminders of the departed great. A quaint vase commemorating the scientific work of Franklin, Fulton, and Morse has already been installed, together with a bronze bust of Horace Mann presented by the teachers of the United States, and one of Washington by Houdon. Probably the most important feature of the museum will in time be the mural paintings.

Steps are now being taken to build an extension to the colonnade to be known as the Hall of Fame for Women. This site will accommodate a building about 30 by 60 feet, to consist of a ground-floor museum with a main story of twenty-eight columns supporting a pedimented roof. Places will be provided for fifty-seven tablets in addition to those of Emma Willard, Mary Lyon, and Maria Mitchell, as follows: Forty-seven for native American women and ten for those of foreign birth. Until this addition is completed, the tablets will be placed on the walls of the museum of the Hall of Fame.

Ament the rattle of protest over the omission of Poe from the narrow colonnade, there were three counts in the indictment against him. First, he drank to excess; second, he set no good example in his relations with the sex, and, third, he was an objectionable person with whom to deal. Scotland is a God-fearing, reverential country, but no Caledonian would topple over Burns because he was an indifferent husband, a poor father, a fickle lover, and a bad citizen. It is a pity that such a genius as Poe should be so disreputable. It was a pity that Paris did Dumas in bronze and ignored Balzac. But such is fame.

Washington was deemed dull by his contemporaries. There is a tradition, of much comfort to Grant during his Presidency, that the elder Adams summed up Washington as a stupid man who had won his reputation by holding his tongue. The test of immortality may come early, as with Caesar, or late, as with Charlemagne, whose contemporaries gave him but grudging esteem. Nobody would have named Lincoln for posterity in 1860. Nobody denied his greatness in 1865.

Of the forty immortals now tableted in the Hall of Fame only eight or ten had any special advantages in shaping their careers. As some one has said, in Europe, of seventy-one famous men of letters, forty-five were of the upper class. All English historians have sprung from the leisure classes, also most English men of letters and pioneers of thought. As compared with which, less than a fourth of those who have stormed the University Heights were equally well equipped and accoutred for the climb. Of those who remain with Poe on the lower slopes, the stage on which the world is playing would be bleak enough if everything were not perhaps more or less wrong.

THE MAN IN THE STREET

Copyright, 1905, by THE NEW YORK TIMES

JOHN D. CRIMMINS tells of a party that hired a boat owned by a man at Atlantic City who takes out sailing parties for a consideration. A number of young ladies were of the party.

About a mile and a half out from the Inlet the wind freshened most unexpectedly and there was trouble. For a while it looked as if the dinky little catboat would capsize. The girls were considerably wrought up and gave expression to their fears in no uncertain manner.

"See here, young ladies," said the owner of the craft, just as one of the passengers let out an awful shriek, "you seem to forget that if she goes down I'm the chap that loses most. She's my boat."

ADJT. GEN. THOMAS J. STEWART of Pennsylvania has a National reputation as an orator and story teller. His most recent production in the line of anecdote is illustrative of the resourcefulness of the average Celt when confronted with an embarrassing situation.

A young Irishman who had served an apprenticeship on the rapid transit lines in New York went to Philadelphia and secured a situation as conductor on the Lancaster Avenue line in that city. He had not been working long before the management came to the conclusion that a portion of his daily collections was finding its way surreptitiously into the pooketa of the conductor. In the vernacular of the business he was "knocking down fares." Accordingly a "spotter" was put on his car. The detective took the car at Second Street and two blocks further up a couple more passengers boarded the car. The suspect collected their fares and rang the Indicator bell twice. A block further on three more passengers got on and three more fares were rung up. At Tenth Street nine men on their way to work clambered aboard. The conductor collected nine fares and rang the registry bell eight times. This was the detective's opportunity. Walking to the front end of the car he scanned the register dial closely, and then returned to the rear platform, counting the passengers as he did so.

"How's this?" he inquired, with a jerk of his thumb toward the interior of the car.

"How's phwat?" inquired the Irishman.

"Nine passengers got on, and you rang up only eight fares."

"Is thot so?" responded the conductor, elevating his eyebrows with a look of innocent surprise. Then, marching forward, he ostentatiously counted the fares on the big dial, and returning to where the "spotter" waa waiting for him, exclaimed with a look of injured innocence on his face:

"Begorra yer right. Wan av thim has got to git off."

THE consideration of religion has such weight in the Irish mind that it results at times in funny incidents," said a returned traveler the other day. "When I was in Dublin this Summer there came to the Royal Irish Constabulary depot seven stalwart youths who sought admission to the famous body. The Sergeant proceeded to take their names and addresses.

"'Your name and address?' he asked the first.

"'I'm Thomas Fahey, Sir, from Killonglin.'

"'Next?'

"'John Leahy, Sir, from Killonglin.'

"'Next?'

"'Peter Dempsey, Sir, from Killonglin.'

"'By gor, yer all from Killonglin!' said the Sergeant.

"'Yis, Sir,' responded the next in line. 'There's six men, and a Protestant.'"

COL. ABE GRUBER tells this of himself. He was standing on a street corner one day last week when he waa approached by one of his constituents, who said abruptly: "I tell you what, Mr. Gruber, I've got a girl that loves me. I was just passing her home when she stepped out into the street, and she looked so pretty that I couldn't help giving her one on the lips right then and there."

"Did she stand for it?" asked Mr. Gruber, amiling.

"Did she stand for it?" repeated the young man; "why, she got up on her toes."

E. S. WILLARD, the English actor, was one time rehearsing a stage hand to repeat the lines, "The Count is waiting." Mr. Willard was not at all pleased with the man's manner of delivering the line, and in a full, rich voice, Mr. Willard repeated the sentence and remarked that it would sound better if spoken just as he had spoken it.

"If I could say it that way I wouldn't be working for $6 a week," remarked the stage hand.

"Do you only get $6 a week?" inquired the actor.

"That's all," replied the stage hand.

"Well," said Mr. Willard, "say it any way you please."

CLAY CLEMENT, the actor, tells a story of his farming venture in Texas. He had purchased a large ranch and had started in to raise a number of things on a big scale. One day he met Senator Bailey, whom he quite resembles, both in stature and features. Bailey asked Clement if he were yet acclimated. "Oh, yes—the air is fine here," replied Clement.

"No," said Bailey, "I mean are you acclimated?"

"What do you mean, Senator, by acclimated?" inquired Clement.

"That," replied the Senator, "when one comes to Texas he gets rid of all that he brings with him and then starts on an even footing with the rest of us."

Clement immediately concluded to try some other climate more easily gotten used to.

"Don't be so hasty," replied the second Celt, "in formin' your conclusions. Malbe the company ain't on to him yit!"

A PROMINENT naval officer tells of the trials of a colleague in marrying off the girls of his large and interesting family. Also there is a lad of ten years in this family who, according to the officer who tells the story, is gifted with a very observant mind.

Toward the end of the Winter the father informed the lad that he was going to lose his sister Ethel, for she had become engaged to a Lieutenant just out of Annapolis. "I'm sorry to hear that, dad," said the youngster, "because I'm awfully fond of Ethel. Still, we'll have Alice and Eva and Maud and Susie, won't we?" Then, after a moment's reflection, he added:

"By the way, dad, this arrangement will advance Alice a number, won't it?"

WHEN Lord Thurlow was Lord Chancellor of England he was much at outs with the Bishop of London. The latter was visited one day by a clergyman who desired a letter of recommendation to Lord Thurlow to enable him to secure the appointment to a fat living then vacant.

The Bishop wrote it, although protesting that an introduction by him would do more harm than good. When Thurlow read the letter he scowled and said:

"Well, as that scoundrel, the Bishop of London, has introduced you, you will not get the living!"

"So the Bishop said, my Lord," was the meek reply.

"Did the Bishop say so?" roared Thurlow: "then I'll prove him a liar, for you shall have the living!"

And he was as good as his word.

Many New Novels by American Writers

Robert W. Chambers Drops Humorous Fantasy to Become Historically Fantastical--Pole Baker and Red Saunders Again--A Billionaire's Waterloo.

THE American novelist is assuredly having his day so far as the number of his productions goes. American books now lead in the American publishers' fiction lists. American novels are widely read and enjoyed; nobody now questions that. The American writer of fiction knows his public, and caters to its taste with tact as well as industry.

This is an Autumn of many new novels by Americans, of few that will help their authors to lasting fame, to be sure, but of few, as it seems, that are not distinguished by capable workmanship and an understanding of the story teller's province. The batch of ten new native novels, herewith described, fitly represents the whole. These are all good stories expertly told; they belong to all the varied departments of modern fiction, for the historical and romantic, the "timely" subject, such as motoring; the story of the greed of wealth and power in contemporaneous life, are all here, as well as the tale of mystery, the love story pure and simple, and the narrative of rural life, lightened by rustic humor, dignified by homely philosophy.

None is a masterwork; none is dull and hard to read. The faults of the typical American novelist are haste (though he has acquired skill in his quick work) and a lack of that deep sincerity of purpose which governs the great artist. His books are apt to lack atmosphere, and his characters seem superficial. They entertain us for a while, but we soon forget them. On the other hand, the merits of these books are not inconsiderable, as one who reads further may learn.

"THE RECKONING."

THE new historical novel by Robert W. Chambers, who does not forget he is making a series of romances of the American Revolution, and returns to it now from an excursion in humorous fantasy, purports to be the autobiography of a spy. He is in New York during the British occupation, sending intelligence to the Continental army. The story is full of mysteries and perils, the hero always under the shadow of the gallows and meeting many exciting adventures and hairbreadth escapes. He differs from Major André and Nathan Hale in that he used his position "in the household of Sir Peter Coleville, his secretary, his friend, his welcomed guest, the intimate of his family, his friends," to betray the confidence unsuspectingly reposed in him. One cannot but revolt from such perfidy, no matter in what cause it was enlisted. Carus Renault is, however, a very fine fellow upon his own showing. He takes the reader from scene to scene of vigorous action, and almost obtains pardon for his betrayal of social intimacies by the heroism of which he shows himself capable.

Indians play no small part in the drama, the author showing unusual comprehension of the savage nature. There is a passionate love story, quite too passionate and self-surrendering on the part of the lady. The notorious Walter Butler is the villain of the romance, which, however, he happily fails to wreck.

Mr. Chambers writes with much spirit and movement. "The Reckoning" (Appletons) is a stirring story, and one that will serve a high purpose if it accentuates the truth which should be burned into the soul of humanity, that "War is hell," that there is no idemnity for its anguish, its horrors, its bloody graves, and its broken hearts.

DIABOLICAL JABEZ RAND.

READERS of Mrs. Fremont Older's novel, "The Socialist and the Prince," will greet with interest a new romance from the pen which drew the strong character of the Socialist and vividly pictured certain phases of California life. "The Giants," (Appleton,) fulfills in large measure the promise of its predecessor. The real heart of the story lies in its recital of the diabolical methods of one Jabez Rand, President of the Model Improvement Company, who crushed heart and life out of a poor Californian, because, having "struck oil" on his little farm, after weary years of penury, the poor man wished to reap the profits of his discovery, and refused to sell out to the Model on the company's own terms. Mrs. Older is relentless in her exposure, scathing in her denunciation of Rand and his ruthlessly employed omnipotence. Her scene soon shifts to New York, where the son of the man robbed and virtually murdered beards Rand in his own home and finally achieves his downfall. The novel leaves the lines of history for those of prophecy when it depicts the billionaire deposed, conquered. David seems to have had the experience of seeing the wicked flourishing like a green bay tree, then looking and "lo he was not." To these latter days is vouchsafed but the earlier vision: we look, and lo, there he is, spreading his branches, more green and flourishing than before. Mrs. Older's dramatic account of the Waterloo of her billionaire, and the downfall of the despotism of the dollar reads like Bellamy's "Looking Backward," but her dream seems real while she tells it, for she is terribly in earnest.

The book depicts the life of a young man in New York, first as a student of Columbia University, then as a struggling lawyer, lastly as District Attorney, triumphant prosecutor of the Absolute Monarch of plutocracy. At the same time the heroine's brilliant career as a writer for the daily press is described. These young people leap into fame and fortune with astonishing rapidity. The metropolis is a more "stony-hearted stepmother" than Mrs. Older imagines.

A football game is vividly presented, and the author takes occasion to throw down to Harvard a glove which, we fancy, her sons would be quick to take up.

The seductive siren is a nauseous superfluity. In real life a respectable landlady and her boarders would not guilelessly accept a woman so obviously classed.

The love story is of subordinate interest. The misunderstandings are needless, and, as usual, the renouncing lover shines more brightly than the man who wins.

But, while the book cannot rank with novels of insight and of character drawing, it is a story interesting and well told, one that will not fail to hold its readers to the close. Its ethics, too, are beyond cavil. If the author's dream of a purer atmosphere and of higher financial ideals be "iridescent," it is, nevertheless, good for the soul to dream it.

A MOTOR STORY.

GIVEN: Two men, two maids, two motor cars, some matter o' money, and more matrimony.

Problem: To follow the course of true love at first sight through 288 pages of varied merriment and mishap, of punctured tires, frenzied feelings, and millionaire magnanimity. Scenery, the highways and byways of England, whizzed through at fifty miles per hour or contemplated over the appetizing fumes of al fresco tea and coffee.

Q. E. D.: That the hero is "an awful lot of a man" finally "marked up ten on the heroine's affection gauge."

Corollary: All persons desirous of acquiring the smart gasoline language and at the same time a few moments' harmless diversion, apply to "Baby Bullet," care of Lloyd Osbourne, (Appleton.)

RED SAUNDERS AGAIN.

THE novel called "Plain Mary Smith," by Henry Wallace Phipps, (Century Company,) is the story of the charms of a young woman plain only in name. Bill Saunders, already well known to an admiring public as Red Saunders, makes his first appearance in a long story. Bill, however, is not the real hero of the story, only the narrator. In homely but picturesque language he tells first of his own domestic difficulties. His mother was an angel, but his father erred on the side of too much righteousness, and so finally after that gentleman had made life unbearable to his sixteen-year-old son by a too zealous desire to adhere to the letter of the Scriptures and not to "spare the rod," Bill packed his few belongings and started off to seek his fortunes elsewhere—taking with him the blessings of both his parents.

On board the Matilda, Bill met plain Mary Smith. She was "a girl of about twenty, supple and balanced as a tight-rope walker; you thought she was slim when you first looked at her, yst, when you looked the second time you couldn't prove it." On shipboard, too, was Arthur Saxon, a handsome musician much taken with Mary's charms. It is the romance between Mary and Arthur which Bill, in a brotherly sort of way, aids and abets. For that romance is tempestuous and leads its principals into many tight places. Indeed, besides the strenuous efforts of the indefatigable Bill, it requires a tornado at sea, a miniature revolution in Panama, and a bit of clever strategy as well on Bill's part at last to unite permanently the affections of these two estimable young persons.

POLE BAKER.

READERS of Will N. Harben's "Abner Daniel" remember that modest hero whose name now provides the title of Mr. Harben's new story, "Pole Baker." (Harper.) Pole is a hero in everybody's eyes but his own, but, alas, he is a drinking man, too. But Pole is also a sage and a humorist, and doubtless Mr. Harben drew his character directly from life. The tact and justice with which he administers the affairs of others adds to the tragedy of his own. But once does Mr. Harben actually put his pen to that tragedy which runs between the lines, and it is at the climax where the "White Caps" local administrators of lawless justice) come to whip Pole for neglecting his wife. Then the honest fellow, knowing his weakness better than his judges, submits so quietly that not a man has the heart to raise a hand. Who reads of Pole Baker must feel with Pole Baker's wife—deploring, yet loving.

The action of the story is around the love affair of a young couple in the village. The man is Pole's friend, impetuous, passionate, and needful of the philosophy of such a man as Pole. Cynthia Porter, the girl, is pleasing, but her mother and father are really wonderful pieces of work. Old man Porter with his quaint, crude views of life is richly humorous, while Mrs. Porter with her suspicious and threatened insanity strikes a weird, repulsing note. Then there is old man Mayhew, the miser; the bad man from the "moonshine still"; Mrs. Snodgrass, the village gossip; the village parson, and a host of others. The mythical Springtown of Mr. Harben's book lives, laughs, gossips, and weeps from the first page to the last, and leaves a vivid impression of a village swallowed in an earthquake of book covers.

NORTH AND SOUTH.

THE best-drawn character in Norah Davis's novel, "The Northerner," (Century Co.,) is a native of Alabama, though the New Yorker is ostensibly the hero.

The scene is Alabama and the New Yorker is the alien who "believes in negro equality" and is not inspired by the strains of "Dixie." Is this a New Yorker? Mentioning Dixie, it may be said that the landscape painting of the South is good. Purple wistaria and jasmine and the pale amethyst sky are well described. But the town of Adairville, where a color prejudice keeps an unconvincing action going, does not seem natural. Why a town full of supposedly human beings with supposed human hearts should conspire against the Northerner to ruin him and his business because he is a Northerner and quite an admirable fellow is something that passes comprehension. Of course, there is a prejudice in the South, which may be provoked easily by a defiance of color line ethics, but the town of Adairville seems to have been rabid on the subject.

Still, this may be the real South and the author of "The Northerner" may have gone deeper than other writers. If so, the reader should be indebted to her for a revelation of conditions that would deter one from spending that proposed vacation in Dixie.

ANOTHER SOUTHERN STORY.

HARRIS DICKSON'S "Duke of Devil-May-Care" (Appleton) is the story of Noel Duke, whose Mississippi River plantation is called "Devil-May-Care." Duke is a gay fellow who has a bad name which has served to make an enemy of Mrs. Ashton, a purposeful old lady. Mr. Ashton owns the neighboring plantation of Ivanhoe, and has a pretty daughter and a prettier niece. Noel Duke falls in love with the niece. Mrs. Ashton stands between, therefore Mr. Duke goes to Vicksburg, plays poker, races horses, fights game chickens, and leads a generally bad life. He kills a man, too, or thinks he does.

Then Mardi Gras in New Orleans and a little hotel in the French quarter, to which come Mrs. Ashton and her charges, and in the morning Mrs. Ashton has disappeared—nay, even her room has disappeared. Monsieur, the patron, declares, with profuse Gallic gestures, that he never saw the old lady, that the young ladies came alone.

That, with Mr. Duke lurking in the house opposite, (in fear of the officers of the law,) is the mystery. Where is Mrs. Ashton? Besides, there is the further unfolding of the romance of Noel and Anita, the niece from Virginia. It is all very much like other detective stories in the lighter farcical manner.

CHARMS OF CECILIA.

CECILIA, the heroine of "Cecilia's Lovers," by Amelia E. Barr, (Dodd, Mead & Co.,) was very young and earnest, and of an appealing beauty. She was "small, and her color was not vivid, but subject to her emotions." She had large soft eyes and an "almost transparent aquiline nose," which the author hastens to define as "the nose of a Princess," and she also had a great deal of fair brown hair, and an "upright heart, a straightforward mind, and the purity of crystal." After this description it is easy to imagine what havoc the fair Cecilia, in her innocent and unconscious way, played with the minds and hearts of men. She was the daughter of a dead artist, who had left her a heritage of poverty. She came to New York to seek employment, and there, quite naturally and accidentally, when she was the most down on her luck, she met in the Park Mr. Willard Carter, an old pupil of her father's, who at once saw it his duty to provide for Cecilia.

So Cecilia becomes Carter's secretary, and forthwith has many experiences, all of which appear in detail in the story. There are other characters, too, besides Carter and Cecilia. For instance, there is Charlotte Hatton, who had loved Carter for six years in a hopeless sort of way, but who, in the end, jilted him charmingly; there is Henrietta Spencer, Cecilia's rich cousin, who loved Phil Witmore—and Phil himself, who thought he loved Cecilia—and Frank Hatton, who knew he loved her, and Polly, a most precocious child of eleven, and a number of other more or less interesting personages, all of whom admirers of Mrs. Barr's stories will, no doubt, find very entertaining acquaintances.

THE VILLAGE ORPHAN.

JOHNNY BEAL, an orphan of five years, is the central personage in "The Ward of the Sewing Circle," by Edna Edwards Wylie, (Little, Brown & Co.,) though the story was not written for children. There was no one in Smithville who wished to take care of Johnny except Miss Mehetable Allen, who was too poor. So it was decided at a meeting of the Sewing Circle to make him a general ward, and pass him around among the members for two months at a time.

Johnny, still dazed by the sudden and inexplicable departure of his mother, was taken into the wagon of Mr. Bluett and started on his first two months' temporary residence. Mrs. Bluett was a capable housekeeper and she scrubbed Johnny quite as conscientiously as she did her floors. She also administered to his bodily comforts and granted him besides his three meals, two "pieces" between meals, at 10 and 4. In short, although Johnny was never able to establish intimate relations with Mrs. Bluett he was a quiet, obedient little soul, and all went well.

And so the child was passed along, and Mrs. Wylie describes with pathos and humor his various receptions. She tells how Deacon Cressman and his well-meaning wife endeavored to instill religious precepts into his uncomprehending mind; how Mrs. Whitcomb consigns him to the stable to room with the hired man; how that hired man becomes a Prince of the Golden Spurs to the heartsick little fellow; how Miss Mehetable alone, when it comes her turn to take the child, makes him almost forget his mother.

Then Johnny is dragged, an unwilling visitor, to the house of the Pudges, where he is unwelcome. Mr. Pudge makes the tiny chap work for his board, and kicks Tab, a large cat, and Johnny's dearest friend, to death in the very presence of Johnny. That is too much for Johnny. With the dead Tab pressed against his shivering little body, Johnny runs away from the Pudges—runs straight into the arms of good fortune in the shape of Mr. Herman Ashmore.

After that, in spite of an attack of pneumonia, things go well for Johnny, and there is a little middle-aged love story woven into the tale, in which Mr. Ashmore figures, as does also Miss Allen.

A SCALPED MAN.

KIRK MONROE, author of "The Outcast Warrior," (Appleton,) has devised for his hero a singular career. Knighton begins by tutoring his way through Harvard, and then, after he has undertaken the practice of medicine, falls in love with the fiancée of the rich young man he has tutored. That rich young man is a hard drinker, and upon his wedding eve is so very far from sober that Knighton locks him in his room. The bride waits in vain, and the hero flies to the West. There he is befriended by a young Indian chief, is adopted into the tribe of Aricarees, and becomes a famous medicine man. He discovers a valley full of whitened bones and the shadow of death. He rides through it on his black stallion, the beast holding its head high, and so wins a ghostly reputation. Later he is scalped by Sioux and left for dead, and then becomes for the second time an outcast.

Men call him the man with the fur cap—since his head is always covered. He has many further adventures. In the last chapter he entertains a General of the United States Army in his cave, where his beautiful daughter does the honors and he himself wears conventional evening dress. Such, it seems, has come to be his invariable custom, in spite of the cave he lives in. The story begins, of course, in the good old days before the war.

Leisurely? Well, Rather.

"Some people deal with graft about the way a farmer in Northern Pennsylvania dealt with an emergency," said Mayor Weaver of Philadelphia one day last week.

"This farmer called on a neighbor very early one morning. The latter, although much surprised at receiving such an early call, did not forget his hospitality.

"'Come in, Jake, and set down,' he said, cordially.

"'I don't know'e I ought,' said Jake, but after a little more persuasion he went in. About fifteen minutes were consumed in miscellaneous discussion of crops, when breakfast was ready.

"'Sit by, Jake, and hev a bite ter eat,' invited the still hospitable farmer.

"'Now, act'ly, Silas, I don't know's I orter stay so long. Ye see, 'taint's though I didn't 'preciate yer kindness, but my roof's afire, and I cum over ter borrer a ladder.'"

"Yahb Doctors" of the South

IN these days of wonderfuly compounded patent medicines and sensational "cure-alls" discovered by the different medical colleges, it is interesting to note that the old "yahb doctor," with his mysterious collection of berries, barks, and herbs, still holds his own in the South. Not only in the backwoods and mountainous districts below Mason and Dixon's line, but even in the large cities like Baltimore and New Orleans one may find his queer little shop tucked away in some small byway, where the moss peeps through the uneven pavement and the barefooted pickaninnies build mud dams across the street puddles.

A closer inspection of the little shop through the maze of dried herbs and barks hanging outside may reveal a crudely lettered board announcing that "Old Doctor Lee Cures All Ills of the Human Race." It is very likely that the door is open and the curious stranger who cares to enter the dim little shop will find the "doctor" either engaged in scraping some sappy roots or prescribing for ons of his numerous patients. The oddity of the tiny, herb-filled room is enhanced by an embalmed rattlesnake in a glass box and a noisy crow with a split tongue who has mastered the art of talking. As strange callers are rare in thie curiosity shop, the "doctor" raises his yellow-tinted eyes inquiringly.

"I want to get soms sassafras bark," you should say, for sassafras is the most harmless of all the barks in his queer stock. While he shambles about searching for a paper bag you will have the opportunity of whiffing the herbs and roots and reading the ludicrous labels on the great array of odd bottles lined up on the long shelves.

"Dr. Lee's Great Discobery For Informationary Rhsumatism," reads one label that decorates a bottle that once held beer, but now holds a chocolate-colorsd concoction.

"Poke Pills For Misery in the Back" are the words scribbled across a tin box that probably once held blacking.

Another queer-looking bottis informs the visitor that it contains something that will surely cure "Apple Colic." Poesibly this explains why the Southern pickanniny can digest more green apples than the small boy of ths North.

How dose the "yahb doctor" replenish his stock when the barks, roots, and herbs run low? This question may be answered by any one who happens to be strolling out beyond the outskirts of the city on a Spring or Summer morning. Out in the dewy fields and around the soggy land adjacent to small streams an old man may be seen industriously searching among the tangled vines and grass blades. It is the "yahb doctor." Frequantly he plucks some shrub or plant and drops it into his greasy basket. Occasionally it is a root he cuts with his rusty knife and places in one corner of the basket, to be scraped and boiled when he returns to his little shop. The variety of plants that grow almost in the shadows of a Southern city is astonishing, and the "yahb doctor" knows them all, and knows where to find them. By sunrise the old man has filled his basket and started on his long walk homeward. When he reaches his shop it is not long before the smoke rolling out of his little chimney tells that he is engaged in reducing some of the morning's sollection to mysterious broths and syrups.

But while the "yahb doctors" of the cities turn their queer occupations to profit, it is doubtful if they are master of as many herbs, barks, &c., as the old colored "mammies" of the Southern plantations. What artist ever attempts to depict the intsrior of a log cabin without sketching a hundle of herbs and barks hanging from the walls? Up in the dark loft of mammy's cabin can be found every bark, herb, berry, or root that was ever guilty of curing or killing. Indeed, even dried insects and reptiles are used for medicinal purposes, and sometimes the effect on ths patient is rather startling. The story is told of a Northern hunter who went gunning in the Florida swamps. There was not a doctor within twenty miles, and when the visitor was suddenly attacked with a needlelike pain he imagined he had the appendicitis, and it would be all over with him long before he could reach the nearest railroad. One of the Creole guides was so positive that "Mammy Milly" could relieve the pain that the Northerner, like a drowning man clutching at a straw, consented to follow him through the wilderness to the old woman's cabin. When they reached the little clearing in the thickets they found "Mammy Milly" busily engaged in brewing something in an iron pot.

"White gen'man is sick," announced the Creole, peering into the pot.

"I am sure I have the appendicitis," groaned the hunter, nervously.

"Well, chile," replied the old woman. "Ah nevah heahd ob dat kind ob disease befo', but Ah hab sumfin dat Ah only use in de worst cases. Dat will surely cure yo'."

She dipped a tin cup in the boiling pot and held it out to the patient.

"Drink dis right down es hot ss yo' kin stan' it," she ordered.

The mixture resembled some kind of broth with oil floating on it.

"What is it made of?" asked the Northerner, a little suspiciously.

"Doan ask me dat now. Ah'll tell yo' aftah while. Dootah's ought not to tell der secrets enyhow."

The man who imagined he had the appendicitis drained the cup at a gulp and then danced around like a Sioux.

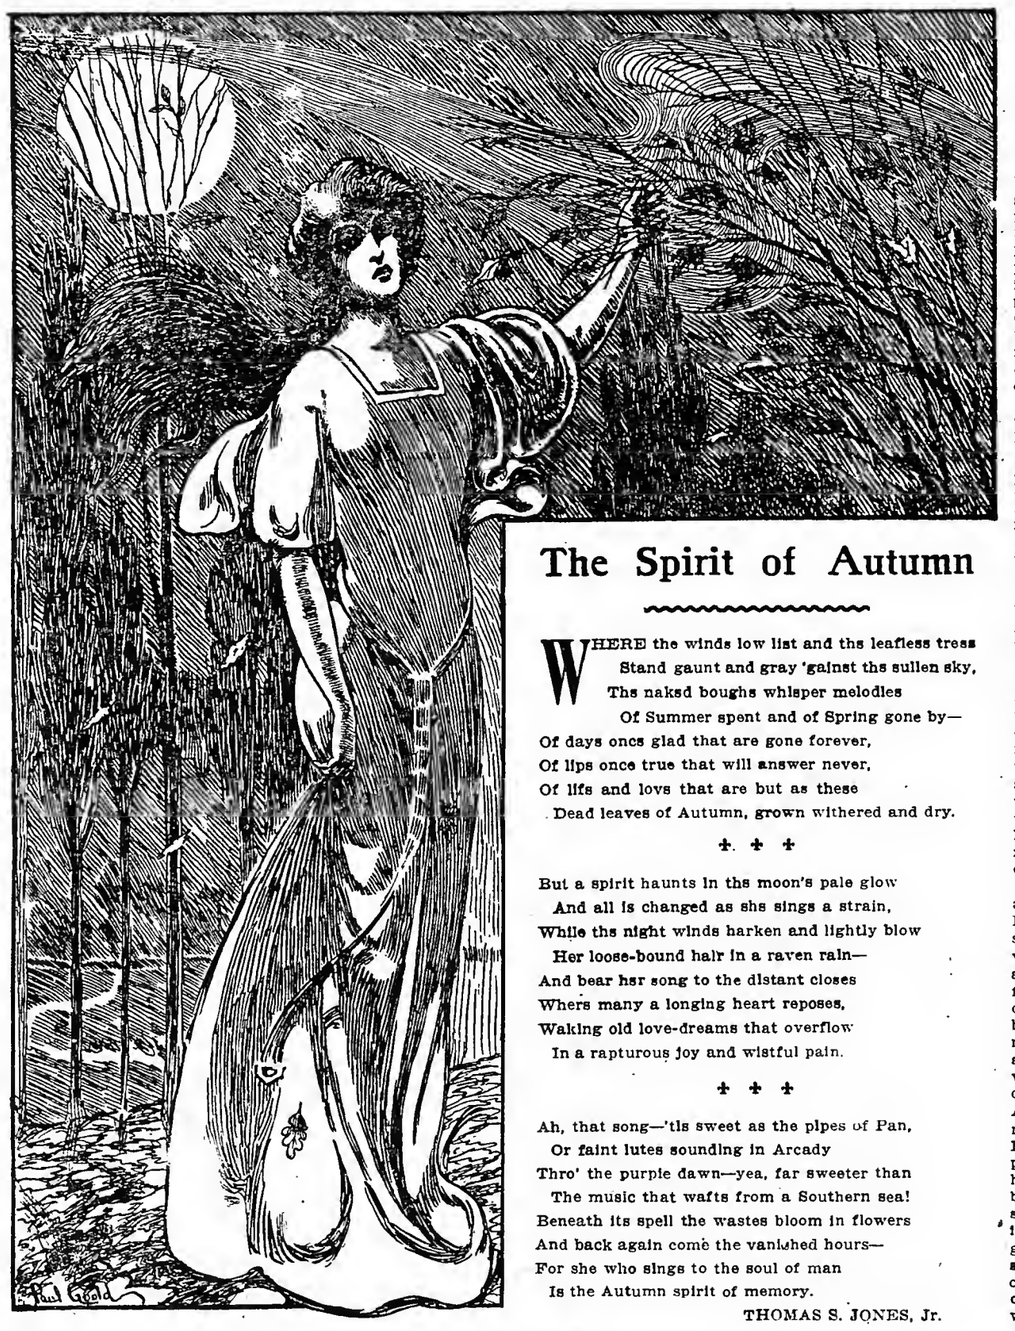
"What on earth is that?" he demanded.

"Eet ain't got no perticular name, sah; Ah jes' bile up sum ob dese blue-back lizards, an den Ah skim de broth—"

But the Northerner was gone. He rushed over the tangled trail until he reached the hunting camp and then swallowed milk and mustard as an emetic. After a great struggle the last of the startling dose was gone and so was the appendicitis.

"Just as soon as you feel the pain," he related to his friends when he returned North, "go out and boil some blue-backed lizards."

But ahs friends agrse it will be some time before this strenuous remedy from Florida gains a foothold in the North.



The Spirit of Autumn

WHERE the winds low list and the leafless tress
Stand gaunt and gray 'gainst the sullen sky,
The naksd boughs whisper melodies
Of Summer spent and of Spring gone by—
Of days once glad that are gone forever,
Of lips once true that will answer never,
Of lifs and lovs that are but as these Dead leaves of Autumn, grown withered and dry.

But a spirit haunts in the moon's pale glow
And all is changed as shs sings a strain,
While the night winds harken and lightly blow
Her loose-bound hair in a raven rain—
And bear her song to the distant closes
Whers many a longing heart reposes,
Waking old love-dreams that overflow
In a rapturous joy and wistful pain.

Ah, that song—'tis sweet as the pipes of Pan,
Or faint lutes sounding in Arcady
Thro' the purple dawn—yea, far sweeter than
The music that wafts from a Southern sea!
Beneath its spell the wastes bloom in flowers
And back again come the vanished hours—
For she who sings to the soul of man
Is the Autumn spirit of memory.

THOMAS S. JONES, Jr.

The Zemstvo Congress at Moscow

Impressions of an Eye-Witness.

Moscow, Sept. 27.

THE Zemstvo Congress in Moscow was a private meeting, not by wish of the members, but by order of the Government, and, although the results of the deliberations have been published, few have any idea of the scene which was enacted. There were present a small band of Russian journalists—and their labors were for the most part in vain owing to the activity of the press censor's blue pencil—and five Englishmen, among whom the writer was privileged to be included. The only other outsider was an intrepid photographer, who when the Congress last met was arrested by the police when the meeting was disbanded by force. On the present occasion his vocation was more peaceful.

The Dom Shcherbatova, in which the Congress met, is a large and palatial house which recalls the Salons of the last French Empire, but the fine room which served the purpose of a Congress chamber could barely hold the numerous delegates who came from Siberia, the Crimea, Poland, the Caucasus, and every part of Russia. An anteroom was thronged with the journalists, including a woman; leading out of that room was a smaller room, in which as I entered Mr. W. T. Stead was sitting for his portrait to a draughtsman representing a Russian magazine, and another room contained refreshments of every kind. This last room was most important, for the Russian is by nature a prodigious trencherman, and every two hours the assembly dissolved with a great parade of formality to refresh itself. For an Englishman the language is almost an impossibility, so hard is it to pronounce; even the native of the country monotones his speech to all appearances with difficulty, and his labors are evidently tiring, as his inner man requires much liquid and solid comfort.

The Chairman was changed every day, and on the second day I saw Prince Paul Dolgoroukoff presiding. A man of colossal physique, with a handsome head well set on his broad shoulders, he was a noble head of the Congress. An exact fac simile of his brother Alexander, he differs only in his voice; and his deep bass voice worked wonders among that motley collection of men. On his right and left at a long table sat men with whom might rest the future prosperity of Russia if they but had their way. At one corner of the table sat a man more noticeable than any in the room. He was rather benevolent in appearance, perhaps a little bald, too, and certainly he looked bored, but he wore the bright blue uniform of a Russian officer, which shone out among the black and drab coats in the room with an air of almost aggressive defiance. He was the representative of the Governor General, the outward and visible sign of the bureaucracy which is throttling Russia, and which ordered the meeting to be held in private. Above him, set in the corner of the room, was the sacred ikon, or picture of the Madonna and Child, without which no Russian house is complete, and in front of it there glimmered faintly, as if it were a gleam of hope in the distance, a small candle. Church and bureaucracy together in one corner, and the rest of the room filled with a mass of men representing the tiers état of the country. It was a scene never to be forgotten, and it was that note of color in the corner which made it so vivid a picture of "Holy Russia."

The debate which I heard was upon the "platform" for the forthcoming campaign. It recalled most of all the methods of my school debating society: every one was in deadly earnest and quite nine-tenths were ignorant of the ordinary rules which make debates a possibility. Hence there was much useless repetition, many side issues were raised unchecked by the Chair, and occasionally there was a babel when three or more tried to obtain a hearing. The assembly, however, was more interesting to the physiognomist than to the student of politics.

The speaker of the moment is a young, well-groomed man with a pleasant voice—an ex-gentleman in waiting at the Court of the Czar dismissed for writing a political article in a newspaper. He is a man who will arrive if he has a chance; he has will and ability in abundance. His speech is listened to with rapt attention, when suddenly there leaps up to oppose him a small and venerable looking man, hailing from the Crimea, who in face is not unlike Tolstoy. They bandy words and the old man's ready wit wins the day, and age triumphs over youth, if not by its wisdom, at any rate by an artifice which never fails. There are many other speakers, one in manner and views a replica of Mr. Labouchère, but the majority sit and smoke cigarettes, listening attentively, and, oblivious of the laws of civility and of hygiene, spit on the beautiful parquet floor! Never was a more motley collection of men. Unkempt and long-haired, arrayed in the horrors of which only Russian tailors and haberdashers are capable, many of them young and of great strength, many showing signs of great intellect, there they sit, and it is a joy to see them. Certainly it is a welcome change from the funereal solemnity of the ordinary debate at Westminster.

In the anteroom there is always a crowd round Obi Stead, who has been universally fêted and has been granted interviews with the Czar. He is indeed regarded as a possible savior of the country, and has already shown his power by obtaining the release from prison of a professor who had no idea of why he was incarcerated. A Moscow paper has been pleased to be cynical, and has hailed the new savior as an enemy of England, giving him more kudos on that account than because he is a pro-Russian. But Russian views of England are peculiar, and it was only a day or two ago that a Russian of considerable ability and education assured me that it was time that England abolished the press gang and adopted conscription. Respect for an Englishman, however, is still to be found. I like to boast that on my arrival at the house where the Congress was held I was permitted to leave my hat in the hall and unchallenged to walk upstairs and straight into the assembly room. My dress and speech betrayed my nationality, and the explanation given me by a well-known man who had obtained for me the right of entry was that an Englishman was regarded as above suspicion. It is worth boasting of.

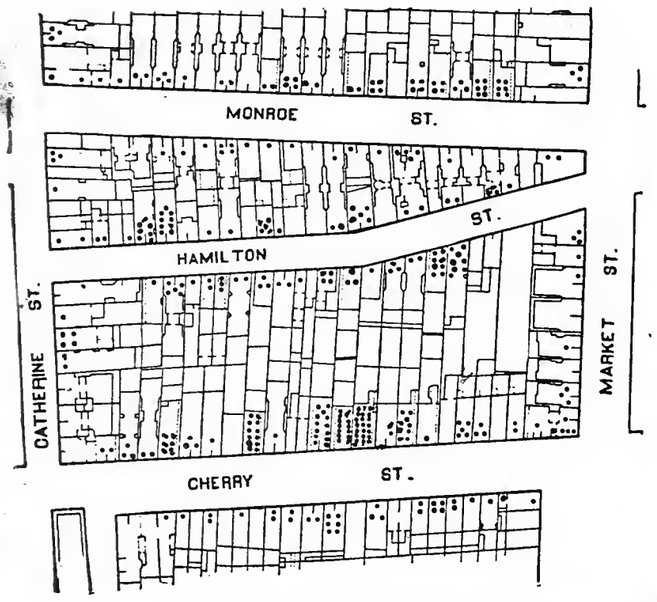
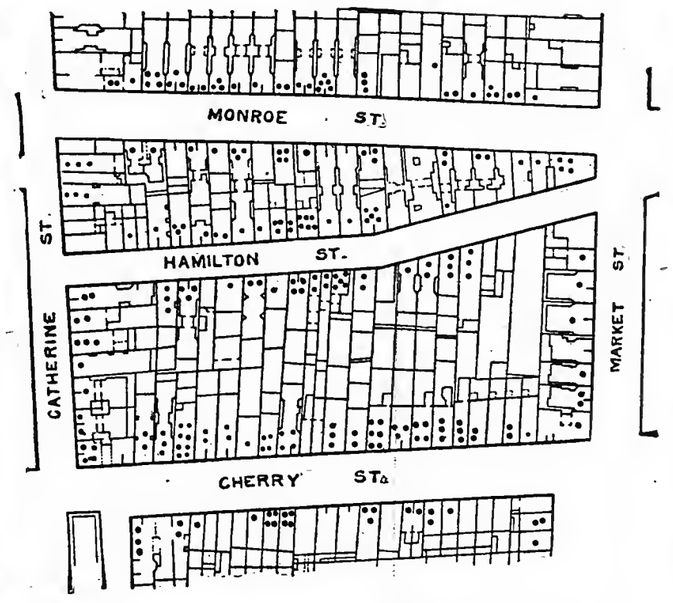
New York's Latest Move Against "The White Plague"

Next Month It Will Inaugurate an Immense Free Consumptive Camp in the Catskills--Dr. Darlington Outlines the Health Department's Plans.



TYPICAL NEW YORK "LUNG BLOCKS"—1894-1898.

"THE BARRACKS," A TENEMENT ON WASHINGTON STREET OCCUPIED ENTIRELY BY SYRIANS.



TYPICAL NEW YORK "LUNG BLOCKS"—1899-1903.

THE heaviest gun which the City of New York has yet brought to bear on tuberculosis will be trained on the white plague on Nov. 1, when Dr. Darlington and Mayor McClellan will formally take possession of the 1,200 acres of ground purchased in the Catskills, where the city will form the largest consumptive camp in the country.

Up in the Shawangunk range of hills in Orange County, half way between Middletown and Port Jervis, and 1,500 feet above sea level, where the pure and health-giving air of the Catskills sweeps down from Lake Mohonk and Lake Minnewaska, the consumptive poor of the city will in a very short time be able to make the fight for health and strength under conditions which a municipality has never before been able to place at their disposal. It will be the realization of the efforts which Health Commissioner Darlington has put forward for some years, and the plan has attracted the attention not only of the city authorities but of scientists and students of tuberculosis throughout the world.

After untiring effort Dr. Darlington succeeded, with the help of the Mayor, in having the authorities appropriate $40,000 as a starter. The deal for the land, which comprises nine farms, having upon them all the necessary barns and farm houses, was closed Oct. 13, and 600 acres of the tract purchased will be put in shape at once, so that patients will be received about Dec. 1. The entire cost of the experiment will approximate $100,000, and no doubt exists in the mind of Dr. Darlington that the city will quickly appropriate the balance as soon as the success of the venture, which is already assured, becomes apparent.

According to the statement made by Dr. Darlington to the Board of Estimate, no more ideal spot for the work in hand can be imagined. The tract is beautifully wooded, springs abound, there is good fishing in season in the mountain streams, and the farms have produced garden truck in abundance for years. There are a number of herds of thoroughbred cattle on these farms, whose dairies have produced 5,000 quarts of milk a day, and as all the farm appurtenances, cattle and buildings become the property of the city by this purchase, there will not only be enough produce and milk properly to feed the patients, but for a time the farms will continue to be a source of revenue to the city.

The work will begin with the remodeling of the farm houses to the purpose of the work, but they will be in no sense hospitals, except that every sanitary precaution will be taken. At first twenty patients will be accommodated, and the work will be allowed to grow as the city makes appropriations. New buildings will go up whenever the necessity for them is apparent and the wherewithal for their maintenance is forthcoming, until, when the camp is completed, several thousand patients can be taken care of.

At first only incipient cases will be taken to the camp, and then an effort will be made to send there the children of consumptive parents who daily dwell among highly dangerous conditions in the sections shown in the accompanying maps. This in the fullest sense of the term can be called an effort to stamp out tuberculosis in the city. It needs only the co-operation of the sufferers themselves, a determination, wherever possible, to get away from the dangerous, congested conditions in the tenement house districts, to crown with success the most ambitious effort yet made by a municipality to stamp out the plague of the century.

All the patients will be charity patients in the sense that no fees will be received from any one, but as the accommodations are increased all will be welcome, and no one will be made to feel other than that he or she is helping to remove the curse of tuberculosis from the land. There will be separate sections on the tract for men and women, and nurses and physicians will be in attendance in order to minister every possible comfort to the afflicted.

It is possible that this consumptive camp will in time, especially if Dr. Behring's cure bears the test of investigation, become one of the prime factors in the cure of tuberculosis. In the dispatches from abroad, and in which only hints of the method of Dr. Behring's cure have become known, it appears that it is based upon the administration to the consumptive patients of milk from cows treated in such manner as to impregnate the milk. It is known that the German scientist has a large herd of cows on his experimental farms. In a year Dr. Behring has promised, if his method is successful, to give the results to the world just as he did with his diphtheria antitoxin. If the new method is such as has been hinted in the dispatches, no better place to carry on the work in this country can be imagined than the new camp in the Catskills. The site was not chosen with any such idea in view, for the plans had been made long before Dr. Behring gave any hint that he had hit on a new means of stamping out the dread plague.

Much the same methods of treatment in vogue in the Riverside Sanitarium will be used in the Catskills camp, and will be for the most part supporting and expectant. No cod-liver oil, creosote, or other special remedies for pulmonary tuberculosis will be used. Iron and strychnia as a tonic, atropia for night sweats, and heroin for the cough will be the medicines most in use. The food given will constitute the main treatment, and special effort will be put forward to supply these patients not only with a full and generous diet, but with plenty of the best milk and eggs which will be at hand in large quantities.

The patients will be kept out of doors as much as possible. That constitutes one of the principal features of the treatment. They will even sleep out of doors, where it is possible to provide suitable accommodations. Rambles through the balmy woods, out of door games, fishing, and other sports will be encouraged.

In the Riverside Sanitarium, where at first only two pavilions were used, accommodations were provided for 48 patients. Then two more pavilions were added, and now there is room for 82 patients. The sanitarium is always full, and there is a long waiting list during the Winter months. In 1904 271 patients were treated there. There were 78 deaths, and the high mortality is accounted for by the advanced stage in which the majority of patients were received.

What the opening of the new camp will mean to those seeking health can be imagined when it is considered that in the Catskills there will be many ways of attending to the patients and giving them every advantage of pure air and exercise such as is impossible in the Riverside institution on North Brother Island. Persons afflicted with tuberculosis who persistently refuse to take necessary precautions so that they become a menace to health may be taken to the latter by force, and it is impossible to induce a large number of the patients to stay after they show any signs of improvement. There is no doubt that this is due to the location of the hospital near the city and without any of the advantages that the new camp can give. It is hard to believe, Dr. Darlington says, that in any case where it is possible for the patient to remain until cured, or at least so improved that his life has been much prolonged, he will not avail himself of the splendid opportunity that the Catskill camp offers.

A look at the accompanying diagrams will give some idea of the peculiar way in which this dread disease has infected certain sections of the city. Driven from one house by thorough disinfection and the education of persons afflicted and those who must perforce come in contact with them, it appears again a few houses further on, and runs a course through the years, often showing from fifteen to twenty deaths in one "lung house" and hundreds every year in one "lung block." According to Dr. Darlington, all of this spread, like an epidemic, is traceable to those who will not or can not take the necessary precautions as to care for expectoration, mode of life, &c., and; while a menace to the life of those about them, yet refuse to go to any hospital.

The most dangerous source of infection comes from what is known as itinerant cases, mostly men and hard drinkers, who live in lodging houses, and when in bad condition enter a hospital for a week or two until somewhat improved. They then leave and resume their old life to the detriment of themselves and those about them.

It is interesting to note how the disease has decreased in certain quarters since the Board of Health first promulgated the edict that tuberculosis was an infectious and communicable disease, dangerous to the public health, and laid down certain rules for its care and to prevent the spread of the contagion.

"The question of tuberculosis," said Dr. Darlington, "is one of the most important questions of the day. The sorrow and desolation that come to some 400 homes every day are from death from an unnecessary disease, which may be avoided and which through education might be stamped from the face of the earth. Besides this, it is well to look on the economic side of the question because of the importance of the life of the wage earner to the State. We call a country rich according to the amount of money in the hands of its people, and when we consider the loss in wages while ill, the expense of caring for the sick, with the extra food, the nursing, the hospital and the physician, clinics, &c., from this one cause alone, the figures are appalling. From the standpoint of humanity think of the untold suffering and distress that have come through premature death in this way. Many a wage earner has been hurried out of the world leaving a helpless family behind, which must also be cared for by friends or the public.

"The loss has been estimated in the United States alone at $330,000,000 annually, while abroad the figures given as the yearly cost of tuberculosis to Prussia is 86,000,000 marks, a tax of three marks a head in the Prussian State. In this city the deaths in 1904 from typhoid fever, smallpox, measles, scarlet fever, diphtheria, whooping cough, and croup were 4,695, while the total deaths from tuberculosis of the lungs alone amounted to 8,512 cases, or nearly double. As the disease often continues for a number of years before it proves fatal, we may easily reckon that the invalidism due to it will go at least one year. It may thus readily be seen what an enormous cost it is to the State. And although this foe of life has existed for many centuries, it is not until within the past twenty years that any rational steps have been taken to check its ravages.

"To-day New York stands foremost in its war against tuberculosis, and we mean to make every effort to stand in the forefront. Sickness is the enemy of prosperity, and physical improvement means mental and moral improvement. One case of infection may bring disease and death to countless others. Health is our birthright, and we have a right to expect it in any community."

A CAMPAIGN OF REMARKABLE DEVELOPMENTS AND PUZZLING SITUATIONS

FOUR weeks ago the political wiseacres predicted that the campaign which is now on would be the most one-sided and dullest New York had ever known. At that time it looked as if Mayor McClellan was certain of a great majority without effort on his part, and that there would be nobody in the campaign to divide the interest with him, unless it was Jerome.

There was a likelihood even that Mr. Jerome's interesting personality would be removed from the campaign. At that time the chances were fair that Mr. Jerome, despite his defiance of the bosses, would have the indorsements of both of the regular organizations.

The change wrought in the political outlook in the past two weeks has been little short of startling. The oldest campaigners have been bewildered by the turn of events. Even those who regard the election of Mayor McClellan as a forgone conclusion now admit that the campaign to be waged, instead of being the dullest New York has ever known, will be one of the most interesting.

Instead of receiving the indorsement of both of the regular organizations, Mr. Jerome has failed to get the indorsement of either of them. They have picked up the gage of battle which he threw down to them.

Jerome's position is that, having served the people for four years as District Attorney, he ought not to be compelled to bow to the bosses for continuance in office. He has made his appeal directly to the people, having had himself nominated by petition. At the time he filed his petition he announced that he would accept any party indorsement which came to him unsolicited, but that he would make no bargains and give no pledges to secure such indorsements. In brief, his position was that the bosses must come to him or be prepared to have him fight them as an independent.

For a time it looked as if the bosses would swallow the bitter pill which Mr. Jerome had prepared for them, even though they did make a very wry face over it.

Then came the suicide of Armitage Mathews, the Secretary of the Republican County Committee, on the morning of the day that Jerome was to bring him to trial on a charge of conspiracy in connection with the looting of an estate.

Many of the Republican leaders were bitter against Jerome for his prosecution of Mathews. "Hounding" was the word they used to describe it. The death of Mathews under such tragic circumstances wrought them up to an uncontrollable pitch. At a meeting of the Republican leaders at the Republican Club some days before Jerome had been supported by only eight of the leaders, and it was then declared that an understanding had been arrived at between Charles F. Murphy, the leader of Tammany Hall, and State Chairman Odell, that Jerome was to be turned down by both organizations. William Halpin, the President of the Republican County Committee, vehemently denies that there was such an understanding, and asserts his belief that, notwithstanding the overwhelming sentiment manifested by the leaders against Jerome at the Republican Club meeting, he would, in all probability, have been indorsed by the Republican County Convention if it had not been for the increased bitterness against him aroused by the Mathews suicide.

The inflamed opinion in the Republican organization against Jerome resolved whatever doubts Mr. Murphy may have had as to the political wisdom of Tammany taking up the District Attorney.

Mr. Jerome has not only been refused an indorsement by Tammany and the Republican organization, but he has also been rejected by the Hearst crowd, who have put a third ticket in the field. His only organized support is that of the Citizens' Union, which will devote all of its energies to his election.

The issue between Jerome and the bosses is therefore clear cut. If he wins bossism will have received the most decisive blow ever struck at the system in New York. His success would prove that a faithful official could do in New York what Everett Colby did in New Jersey—fight the bosses single-handed and put them to flight. The showing which Mr. Jerome will make will have an interest for every boss-ridden city in the United States.

But the independent candidacy of Mr. Jerome for District Attorney is by no means the sole interesting issue of the campaign. The campaign may now be fairly said to bristle with interesting features.

When the election of Mayor McClellan was conceded on every hand it was announced by some of his most ardent supporters that his candidacy this year for re-election as Mayor was to be merely preliminary to his fight for Governor next year. It was predicted that he would go into the Mayor's office by such an immense majority that his nomination as the Democratic candidate for Governor would be assured and his election made highly probable in view of the existing disaffection in the Republican ranks. The interesting question then was: Who will be the Tammany nominee for President of the Board of Aldermen?

The President of the Board of Aldermen succeeds to the Mayoralty when the Mayor resigns, and it therefore seemed certain in view of Mr. McClellan's Gubernatorial ambitions that the man nominated for President of the Board of Aldermen would serve the city as Mayor for three years.

When Charles F. Murphy, the Tammany leader, announced that his candidate for President of the Board of Aldermen was Patrick Francis McGowan, the inquiry rose to the lips of nearly the whole electorate: "Who is McGowan?"

McGowan turned out to be an east side clothing manufacturer who has been serving for some time as a member of the Board of Education without attracting any particular amount of attention to himself. McGowan for Mayor did not seem to be a particularly pleasing prospect to the citizenship of the city, and the demand went up that Mayor McClellan should give a pledge that if he were re-elected Mayor he would serve out his full term.

He has not given the desired pledge yet, but two things have happened which make it highly probable that he will see fit to do so before the campaign is much older.

One of the influences which are being brought to bear on Mr. McClellan to make him promise to serve the city for the full term for which he may be elected is the threat of the Republican leaders in the Legislature, if such a pledge be not given by Mr. McClellan, to pass a bill in Albany this Winter which will provide for the election of Mr. McClellan's successor. That would mean that Tammany would be again compelled to risk the patronage of the city after having secured a mortgage on it for four years.

Another of the influences which are working to force the desired pledge from Mayor McClellan is the insistence of his rival candidates, Messrs. Ivins and Hearst, that he should give a pledge, each of them declaring that if elected he will serve the full term.

That brings us naturally to Ivins and Hearst. Hearst will be taken up first, not because his candidacy is more important than that of Mr. Ivins—and certainly his personality is not half as interesting—but because his candidacy was first announced.

When the Republicans concluded to break with Fusion, the Hearst-municipal ownership forces deliberated as to what should be their course of action. Believing, and correctly, that the unceremonious way in which they were cast overboard by State Chairman Odell and William Halpin indicated an intention on the part of those leaders to frame up a more conservative platform for the Republican Party than that upon which fusion had been invited, they decided to put a third ticket in the field. At first the choice seemed to lie between Judge Samuel Seabury and ex-Senator John Ford. But it soon became apparent that the sentiment among the municipal ownership forces was insistent that Mr. Hearst himself should lead the municipal ownership campaign. After as much hesitation as Caesar showed when he rejected the crown, but hesitation born of an entirely different motive, Mr. Hearst accepted.

He was nominated for Mayor, ex-Senator Ford for Controller, and J. G. Phelps Stokes, the philanthropist who married Rose Pastor, the cigarmaker poetess, for President of the Board of Aldermen.

When it became evident to the Republicans that Mr. Hearst would head a third ticket they were much disturbed, for they had no candidate in mind who would be formidable and would be willing to run against McClellan and Hearst. They had tried to induce Justice William J. Gaynor to run, and failed. In their state of panic they decided to take a desperate chance.

Among those whom they had asked to take the nomination, and who had declined it, was Charles E. Hughes, the inquisitor of the insurance investigation, whose fame has become National. They decided to nominate Mr. Hughes without his consent, believing that there would be a great public demand to have him run, and that he would yield to it. They miscalculated both ways. The great public demand was to have Mr. Hughes continue the work he is doing, and in his formal declination of their nomination Mr. Hughes showed that in no circumstances could he have been induced to abandon the great responsibility which he had taken upon himself in connection with the probing of insurance frauds.

When Mr. Hughes declined their nomination the condition of the Republican organization became pathetic. The nomination for Mayor was literally hawked about, and no one who was wanted could be induced to take it. The odds on Mayor McClellan's re-election became prohibitive.

But when the situation looked absolutely hopeless for the Republicans, when it seemed certain that they would not be able to find even a fairly respectable candidate and would be compelled to trail in a bad third in the Mayoralty race, Edward Lauterbach, who had been acting as a sort of Minister Plenipotentiary for the Republican Committee on Vacancies, had an inspiration.

William M. Ivins, the bitterest and most effective foe that Tammany Hall ever knew, had just returned from Europe. Mr. Lauterbach suggested that the nomination be offered to Mr. Ivins. It was, and to the intense delight of the Republican leaders Mr. Ivins accepted.

At the Republican Convention which nominated Mr. Hughes the platform adopted modified very materially the ideas on municipal ownership which had been put forth in the invitation which William Halpin sent out asking the Citizens' Union, the Municipal Ownership League, and other organizations to become parties to fusion against Tammany. It then leaked out that the reason why State Chairman Odell had so suddenly decided to have the local Republican organization break with fusion was that all of the big conservatives in the Republican Party had told him that he was inviting political suicide by committing the organization to the Hearst propaganda to the extent that Mr. Halpin had done in the original invitation for fusion. The effect of the Hearst alliance, they said, would be to drive all of the Republicans who believed in the rights of property to the support of Mayor McClellan. Moreover, and more to the point, they told him that if the campaign were continued along the lines which had been laid out there would be no money forthcoming from the financial centre to assist the Republican organization.

When the Republicans found Mr. Ivins willing to head their ticket, they believed they had found the ideal man for the situation. No man they believed could put up a better fight against Tammany than he, for no man knows Tammany better. And in addition to his knowledge of the subject, Mr. Ivins has a command of language that few men possess and courage equal to his culture.

As a corporation lawyer of high repute, as President of the General Rubber Company, and as a member of all of the leading clubs of the city, Mr. Ivins was reckoned a man who would hold the conservative vote of the Republican Party and win over many Independent Democrats.

Mr. Ivins had not been a candidate twenty-four hours when the campaign began to take on new life. The vigor and the intellectual charm of his utterances were captivating. But in one respect Mr. Ivins has startled the Republican leaders to such an extent that they don't know "where they're at," as one of them expressed it yesterday.

Instead of being the conservative on municipal ownership they supposed him to be when they nominated him on their revised platform, Mr. Ivins has proved to be as much, if not more, of a radical than Mr. Hearst on that issue. When his attention was called to the fact that his views on municipal ownership went much further than the Republican platform, Mr. Ivins calmly announced:

"I am running on the party platform and on my own. Where the two conflict, mine is good."

He has declared his independence of State Chairman Odell in a way which must have been galling to that statesman, he has attacked as absurd legislation the bill taking away from the Board of Aldermen the franchise granting power, a pet measure of Senator Platt's, which was put through the Legislature by Senator Elsberg, who has become Mr. Ivins's campaign manager, and in many other ways he has shown such an independence of spirit and utterance as almost to dumfound the men who nominated him. They hardly know what to make of him. In speaking of him yesterday one of the most influential of the Republican leaders said:

"I don't know whether we have got a winner or a wild horse that will spill us all out."

+ + +

One of the striking illustrations of independence given by Mr. Ivins was his declaration, after his party had turned down Mr. Jerome and nominated Charles A. Flammer for District Attorney, that he would be pleased to have Mr. Jerome speak from the same platform with him. Mr. Jerome did not see fit to accept that invitation, thereby, in the belief of many, losing a golden opportunity.

Mr. Ivins challenged Mayor McClellan and Mr. Hearst to debate the issues of the campaign from the same platform with him, but both of them declined.

It is generally agreed that the present campaign will be one of the best betting campaigns New York has ever had. As William R. Hearst is heading a third ticket, and as Mr. Jerome is running independently, the vote for each of them ought to show their exact strength on the platforms which they have framed for themselves.

Mr. Ivins is confident that if the vote for Mr. Hearst exceeds 100,000, he as the head of the Republican ticket will be successful whether his associates win or lose.

That there will be more independent voting in the present campaign than in any other campaign in the history of the city is the opinion of the politicians of both parties.

A Season of Great Musical Activity

More Concerts and Other Performances Promised Than Ever Before---Constantly Widening Interest in the Art---What the Music Schools Are Doing.

M. VINCENT D'INDY, THE DISTINGUISHED FRENCH COMPOSER, WHO WILL CONDUCT THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN NEW YORK

MARIE NICHOLS, VIOLINIST

ELSA RUEGGER, BELGIAN 'CELLIST

THE musical season in New York City usually extends from about the first of November until the end of May, but this year it may be said to have started earlier. Most of the musical conservatories and schools have been open now for a week or more, and their plans for the season are well under way.

New York is, of course, the musical centre of the country, not only as regards musical performances of all kinds—the opera, orchestral, choral, chamber music, and visiting soloists—but also as regards the instruction in music. An enormous number of music pupils flock here each year, and are educated in various ways and according to various methods and with various degrees of thoroughness, at the music schools and conservatories of the city, as well as at the hands of private teachers of all degrees of eminence.

The number of musical performances of all sorts in New York in the coming season will be enormous, considerably larger than ever before. The public for all sorts of music and the public appetite for it, seem to increase as the population of the city increases.

The attention given to church music in New York is also very great, and is a natural outcome of the widely disseminated taste for good music. Some of the finest choirs and some of the most distinguished and highly paid choir singers in the country are here. There are a large number of prominent organists in the New York organ lofts.

The indications point to greatly increased activity in the musical world, and the directors of the prominent musical institutions are almost unanimous in stating that the interest in music in New York has shown remarkable growth during the past year. As a rule the early enrollment at the colleges is comparatively small, and many of the pupils do not begin their work till later in the Autumn or in the Winter, but this Fall the opening registration figures have in nearly every instance been higher than the average at this time.

Another proof of the widening musical interest is the success of the new organizations that are springing up in all parts of the city. Mention of the most prominent of these will be found later on.

The competition between the higher grade schools and the increasing demands made upon them have led to a very perceptible improvement in their facilities for musical education, so that, in point of excellence of instruction, a student of music can now find in New York teachers very nearly equal to those of European cities. The best foreign talent obtainable has been secured for the Faculties of our colleges, but, as the director of one of the oldest conservatories remarked: "While we are now able to give our pupils instruction as good as they can get abroad, we cannot give them the same musical atmosphere. It will be many years before we can furnish that, and until then Americans will continue to go to Europe to study." It is encouraging, however, to know that the efforts of the New York musical institutions are being appreciated, and that the number of students is increasing and not diminishing.

KNEISEL QUARTET'S PLANS.

Their Dates, Assisting Artists, and Works to be Performed.

The Kneisel Quartet, which is now a New York organization, since all its members are members of the Faculty of the Institute of Musical Art, will give its usual series of six concerts in Mendelssohn Hall this season. The dates of these concerts are Tuesday evenings, Nov. 21, Dec. 12, Jan. 23, Feb. 27, March 27, and April 10. Last season's subscribers may secure the same seats they had last season by applying to J. M. Priaulx, care of C. H. Ditson & Co., 867 Broadway, before Oct. 25. General subscriptions may be secured on and after Oct. 27.

The artists who will assist at the season's concerts are the following: Harold Bauer, Rudolph Ganz, Harold Randolph, Heinrich Gebhardt, Georges Longy, Charles Martin Loeffler, and Vincent D'Indy.

The list of works intended for performance is as follows: Beethoven—Quartets in G major, Op. 18, No. 2; E minor, Op. 59, No. 2; F minor, Op. 95, and B flat major, Op. 130; Haydn—Quartet in C major; Mozart—Quintet for two violins, two violas, and 'cello, in G minor; Schubert—Piano trio in B flat major; quartet in C major; Brahms—Quartet in C minor, sextet in G major; Rubinstein—Piano-'cello sonata in D major; Smetana—Quartet in E minor, ("Aus meinen Leben";) Saint-Saëns—Septet for piano, two violins, viola, 'cello, double bass, and trumpet; Chausson—Piano quartet in E major; Maurice Ravel—Quartet in F major, (first time;) Vincent D'Indy—Piano quartet in A major; Charles M. Loeffler—Rhapsodies for piano, oboe, and viola, (first time;) Fred A Stock—Quartet in C minor, (MS., first time;) Saint-Saëns—Piano-'cello sonata in F major, (first time.)

Vincent D'Indy is expected to take part in the performance of his piano quartet. Frederick A. Stock, whose quartet will be played, is conductor of the Theodore Thomas Orchestra of Chicago. Charles M. Loeffler will play the viola in his rhapsodies for piano, oboe, and viola.

N. Y. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Walter Damrosch and Felix Weingartner have prepared an interesting and diversified list of compositions to be played by the New York Symphony Orchestra at their double subscription series of concerts this Winter. Under Mr. Damrosch the orchestra will play the following: Bach, suite for flute solo and strings, B minor; Beethoven, Symphony No. 2; Brahms, Symphony No. 3; Debussy, prelude to "L'Apres Midi d'un Faune"; Scherzo from quartet for strings; d'Indy symphony for orchestra and piano, on the song of a mountaineer; Lalo, suite from "Namauna"; Loeffler, symphonic poem, "Le Mort de Tintagiles"; Rimsky-Korsakow, suite, "Scheherazade,"; Tschaikowsky, Symphony No. 4; Wolf, H., Italian serenade; Ysaye, Théo, fantasie on a Wallonian folksong. (New. First time.)

Mr. Weingartner will conduct the following:

Bach, suite for two oboes and bassoon; Beethoven, Symphony No. 5; trio for oboe, clarinet, and English horn; Berlioz, Symphony, "Fantastique"; Brahms, Symphony No. 2; Dukas, "L'Apprenti Sorcier"; Glück, overture to "Alceste"; Haydn, "Oxford" Symphony; Liszt, symphonic poem, "Mazeppa"; Mozart, "Jupiter" Symphony; Schumann, Symphony No. 2, B flat; Smetana, symphonic poem, "Vltava"; Tschalkowsy, overture, "Romeo and Juliet"; Wolf, symphonic poem, "Penthesilea," (first time in New York.)

The sale for subscription seats of these concerts is now going on at the Carnegie Hall box office. The new first instruments of the wood-wind choir will have an opportunity to show their skill in the two Bach suites and in the Beethoven trio for oboe, clarinet, and English horn. Wolf's charming Italian serenade has been given only twice before in New York by the Kneisel Quartet in Wolf's own arrangement for four strings. Mr. Damrosch will give it its first performance with the orchestra. Théodore Ysaye is a younger brother of the great violinist and is looked on as one of the first of younger Belgian composers. Mr. Damrosch expects to make an entire Brahms programme in the concert in which Mr. Joseffy will play the first Brahms piano concerto. The new composition of Sir Edward Elgar for stringed orchestra is dedicated to Prof. Samuel Sanford, whose guest he was at the recent commencement exercises at Yale, at which he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Music. Prof. Sanford is one of the Directors of the New York Symphony Orchestra and is one of the largest guarantors to the orchestra fund.

WILLEM MENGELBERG.

The Philharmonic's First Conductor—Miss Otie Chew, the Violinist.

Willem Mengelberg, who is to conduct the first public rehearsal and concert of the Philharmonic Society at Carnegie Hall on Nov. 10 and 11, will arrive in this country in time to have ten days of rehearsal with the orchestra. Otie Chew, the young English violinist, who makes her first appearance in this country at these concerts, will be a passenger on the Kaiser Wilhelm, due on Oct. 31.

Willem Mengelberg has been much in the public eye because of the successes which he has won at home and in London with his organization, known by the name of the "Concertgebouw," Orchestra of Amsterdam. The name preserves the origin of this band. Until twenty-five yesrs ago Amsterdam was in regular enjoyment of popular and symphony concerts at a hall in the public park. In 1881 the park buildings were remodeled, resulting in the destruction of the music room. The park orchestra went out of existence, much to the regret of music lovers. In 1888 a small coterie of men of wealth and culture built a music hall ("Concertgebouw," that is, concert building,) and called W. Kes to organize an orchestra and series of concerts.

The first year's deficit amounted to $15,000. But the enterprise was persisted in, and when Herr Kes retired from the conductorship in 1895, the Concertgebouw Orchestra was on a good footing. He was succeeded by Willem Mengelberg, who is a son of a church architect and sculptor now living in Cologne. Willem Mengelberg was born in Utrecht on May 28, 1871. He attended the music school in his native town until 1888, when he entered the Cologne Conservatory. There he studied until 1892, when he was graduated with the highest distinction in the pianoforte, composition, and conducting classes. With seventy-nine other aspirants he competed for the post of municipal music director at Lucerne and carried off the prize. There he remained until called to his present position in his native land. He is a pianist, and is frequently called to play for the Queen of Holland. He is a Richard Strauss specialist, and "Ein Heldenleben," which is dedicated to him, will be upon the programme of the Philharmonic concerts which he will conduct.

Otie Chew was born in London, and there, in 1890, she began her violin studies with Richard Gompertz, a pupil of Joachim and professor of the violin at the Royal College of Music. There the next year she won an open scholarship and pursued under him and other masters a thorough course in violin, piano, orchestra and chamber music, harmony and counterpoint, and became distinguished for her thorough and earnest work.

Leaving the Royal College in 1897, she was for a year a pupil of Emile Sauret, and in 1900 she became a resident of Berlin, where in 1903 she made her début in a concert with the Philharmonic Orchestra and in a sonata recital.

Her Berlin successes were followed by her appearances as soloist at a Richter concert in the Queen's Hall, London, and two recitals, when she again received unanimous recognition as a classical player of great technical and artistic ability.

A tour of the principal cities of Germany was made in 1904, the young artist finding continued appreciation of her great gifts. She also made several appearances with orchestra and in recitals in Berlin during the Winter of 1904-5, showing further development and gaining with each succeeding performance new friends. Though her public career has extended over a comparatively short period, Otie Chew has long been known to many as a talented and earnest student, taking her art seriously and finding nothing too difficult to help her to attain her ideals.

The sale of subscription tickets has been the largest in the history of the society. The sale of single tickets will begin to-morrow at Carnegie Hall.

THE RUSSIAN SYMPHONY.

The Russian Symphony Orchestra announces for the coming season two series of concerts in Carnegie Hall, six Saturday evening concerts on Nov. 18, Dec. 30, Jan. 27, Feb. 24, March 17, and April 7, and a new series of three popular price Sunday afternoon concerts on Dec. 31, March 18, and April 8. Subscribers for last season may renew their subscriptions and secure their old seats by sending their applications, accompanied by check or money order, to Miss Isabel F. Hapgood, Carnegie Hall. The regular sale of seats to new subscribers will open Monday, Oct. 16, at the box office, Carnegie Hall, and at Luckhardt & Belder's, 10 East Seventeenth Street.

Mr. Altschuler will conduct all the concerts except those in April, when S. V. Rachmaninoff, conductor of the Imperial Opera at Moscow, and one of the most prominent of the young Russian composers, will direct two concerts devoted to his own compositions. Rachmaninoff will produce at these concerts for the first time his First Symphony and a new orchestral suite, and by special request his tone poem, "The Cliff," which has already found favor with New York audiences. He is also to appear as a piano soloist and will of course play his famous "Prelude." Josef Lhévinne, a noted Russian pianist, a pupil of Safonoff and professor of piano at the Moscow Conservatory, will be heard for the first time in America at one of the society's midwinter concerts.

Lhévinne was the first winner of the Rubinstein prize. He comes to this country as a protégé of Safonoff's, to appear as soloist at the concerts which the distinguished Moscow leader will conduct with the Russian Symphony Orchestra through an extended tour of the East and Middle West. The society will present noted soloists at each of its concerts this season.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The Beginning of Its First Quarter Century—Its Start in New York.

As the coming season marks the end of the first quarter century in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, so it will be the twentieth in which that organization has given concerts in New York, for it was not until the orchestra was five years old that its first concert was given in Steinway Hall. Then, as now, Mr. Gericke was the conductor, but conditions were very different. Concert-goers who attend the Boston Symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall have difficulty in realizing what a long, hard fight it was to build up the splendid patronage that is now found in New York, a work of the better part of the nineteen years that it has visited this city. The growth was always sure, but at first very slow. Steinway Hall was deserted for Chickering, and Chickering in turn gave way to the Metropolitan Opera House, and finally, seven years ago, the orchestra moved to Carnegie Hall and doubled the number of its New York concerts, giving five Saturday matinées in addition to its five Thursday evening concerts.

This move was greeted at the time with much skepticism, but its wisdom was demonstrated from the beginning. Since the season of 1899-1900, when ten concerts were given for the first time, the patronage has steadily and rapidly increased, until last season it was rare that Carnegie Hall was not filled to its utmost capacity.

What was true last year will be true this. The renewals of subscriptions which has been going on for the last few weeks is larger than ever before, and the prospects for a large season sale were never so good as they are now. This season sale for new subscribers opens to-morrow morning at the Carnegie Hall box office, Luckhardt & Belder's, 10 East Seventeenth Street, and at Tyson's. The prices will be the same as last year, $7.50, $6, $5, and $3, with boxes at $50 and $40.

The dates of the concerts are as follows: Thursday evenings, Nov. 9, Dec. 7, Jan. 11, Feb. 15, and March 15, and Saturday afternoons, Nov. 11, Dec. 9, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, and March 17.

A particular interesting series of concerts is promised. Mr. Gericke will conduct all the concerts except those in December, which will have as their conductor M. Vincent d'Indy, the distinguished French composer. An invitation was extended to M. d'Indy last Summer to come to America this Winter and conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of its concerts. This he accepted with much pleasure, and the concerts assigned to him are two in Boston, two in New York, and one each in Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington.

This will be his first visit to America. M. d'Indy is the leader of that school known as "the younger Frenchmen," and to-day is the unquestioned dictator of things musical in France. Much of his music has been played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As a conductor M. d'Indy has been successful in Germany and Austria, whither he has gone as guest several times. His two New York programmes will be composed largely of modern French music, for the most part unknown to New York.

The solo artists that may be now announced for the series are Mme. Gadski and Ellison Van Hoose, in a Wagnerian programme; Alfred Reisenauer, Harold Bauer, Marie Hall, Henri Marteau, Prof. Willy Hess, and Heinrich Warnke, the new principal 'cellist of the orchestra. Others will be announced later.

Besides those which M. d'Indy will introduce there will be some interesting novelties. The list which Mr. Gericke has prepared for Boston, from which the novelties for the New York concerts will be chosen, includes Mahler's Fifth Symphony, a symphony by Amherst Webber, a new overture by Max Schillings, entitled "Der Pfeifertag"; an overture by Smetana, entitled "Libussa"; one by Eugène d'Harcourt, entitled "Le Tasse"; one by Busoni, "Lustspiel," and also a new suite by Busoni, called "Geharnischte," and symphonic poems by Glazounow and Ernst Boehe, "Le Kremlin" and "Odysseus's Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch."

PEOPLE'S SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Six years ago next December a handful of invited people attended the first of the People's Symphony Concerts for Students and Wage Earners at Cooper Union Hall. The remarkable growth of this institution is again demonstrated by the announcement just given out that this year there will be three sets of concerts, at Cooper Union, Grand Central Palace, and Carnegie Hall, respectively. The programme first played at Cooper Union Hall will be repeated at the other two halls. Thus the people may attend these concerts at halls nearest their homes. Besides, the opportunity is offered to listen to the great master works on two or three successive evenings, this being particularly desirable whenever great works are performed, demanding repeated hearings to be thoroughly understood. The fifth anniversary of the People's Symphony Concerts will be fitly celebrated by a programme devoted to works of the three greatest composers of instrumental music, i. e.: Bach—The greatest contrapuntalist, prelude and fugue, (arranged by Abert;) Beethoven—The greatest symphonist, Fifth Symphony, and Wagner—The greatest composer of dramatic music, overture, "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg."

Concerts will be given on the following dates: Cooper Union Hall on Thursdays, Nov. 23, Dec. 21, Jan. 25, Feb. 15, March 15, and April 19, at 8:15 P. M.; Grand Central Palace, on Fridays, Nov. 24, Dec. 22, Jan. 26, Feb. 16, March 16, and April 20, at 8:15 P. M.; Carnegie Hall, on Monday, Nov. 27, and Saturdays, Dec. 23, Feb. 17, and April 21, at 8:15 P. M.

Seats are to be placed on sale at Luckhardt & Belder's music store, 10 East Seventeenth Street. As heretofore, admission will be restricted to students and wage earners by means of identification cards, which cards, countersigned by an institution of learning or an employer, (firm,) must be presented when tickets are purchased. Whenever a school or firm cannot furnish the identification card they can be had by applying to the musical director, F. X. Arens, 305 Fifth Avenue.

The People's Symphony Auxiliary Club, now in its third year, announces six concerts to be held at Cooper Union on Saturday, Nov. 4; Tuesday, Nov. 28; Friday, Jan. 5;, Monday, Feb. 5; Friday, March 9, and April 13. These concerts are devoted to chamber music and to the presentation of works for solo piano, violin, and voice. Admission to members only. Dues, $1.50 annually, entitling each member to two seats at each of the six concerts. For membership apply to the musical director, F. X. Arens, 305 Fifth Avenue.

SAM FRANKO'S CONCERTS.

Mr. Franko has announced the following dates for his concerts of old music: Thursday evenings, Nov. 16, Feb. 1, and March 8, at Mendelssohn Hall. An evidence of the interest which this effort on behalf of old music is arousing elsewhere, is the space devoted to it by European newspapers. Among the recent articles on the subject is one by Dr. Georg Gochler in the Kunstwart, a periodical devoted to the fine arts. He praises the conditions which make possible the success of Mr. Franko's concerts, and adds: "The cultivation of a taste for old music is to be commended, not alone for the mere pleasure it gives or for its implied criticism of modern productions, but as an aid to the appreciation of the great and real that we have inherited from past epochs, and it should be the means of creating a standard by which to measure the value of present-day efforts. Thus, through it we learn to know the good of the past and to retain it, and discriminate between the unworthy and the genuine of our own time."

MUSICAL NOTES

The Metropolitan Opera House Orchestra began work last week under the direction of Alfred Hertz. The work rehearsed was Goldmark's "Queen of Sheba," which, as already announced, is to open the season on Nov. 20. The management announces that the orchestra has been "considerably strengthened, notably by the reinforcement of the string instruments." If this refers to a strengthening numerically, with of course a maintenance of the standard of excellence, the news will be most welcome. For that department of the orchestra was lamentably weak last season.

\+ \+ \+

A new string quartet will be welcomed by the lovers of chamber music in New York, where chamber music has received less than the attention it deserves. The new organization is the Leo Schulz Quartet, composed of Maurice Kaufman, first violin; David Robinson, second violin; Fritz Schaefer, viola, and Leo Schulz, violoncello. Their concerts will be given in Knabe Hall, 154 Fifth Avenue. The first two will be on Jan. 8 and March 9. The programme will consist of works new to New York. Among those already announced are: Glazounow, fifth quartet, Op. 70; Saint-Saëns, second sonata for piano and 'cello; Juon, quartet, Op. 29; Reger, quartet, Op 74; Saar, sonata for piano and violin, Op. 44, and Stenhammer, third quartet, Op. 18.

\+ \+ \+

Miss Marie Nichols, the young Boston violinist, made her American début a season or two ago. In Europe, where she studied, she established herself before returning to this country. On her visit to the Pacific Coast Miss Nichols will be heard with Mlle. Elsa Ruegger, the Belgian 'cellist, who will tour America for the third time.

The Directors of the Musical Art Society of New York announce that the first concert of the thirteenth season will be given in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening, Dec. 14; the second concert on the evening of March 8, 1906.

The Symphony Concerts for Young People enter this year upon their eighth season. Six concerts will be given in Carnegie Hall on Saturdays, Nov. 25, Dec. 16, Jan. 6, Feb. 10 and 24, and March 31 at 2:30 in the afternoon.

The ticket offices of these societies, 1 West Thirty-fourth Street and 21 East Seventeenth Street are now open.

MME. CALVE'S APPEARANCE.

Mme. Calvé will make her first concert appearance in New York at Carnegie Hall on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 4. She will have the assistance of Walter Damrosch and his New York Symphony Orchestra. The sale of seats will be begun at the Carnegie Hall box office Thursday. The programme for that occasion is now being arranged. Naturally a selection from "Carmen" will be among the numbers—this for edification of those who always think of Calvé as Carmen. This will occupy the last place on the programme. Félicien David's "Bird Song," an air from Gluck's "Alceste," and another aria will be prominent, though probably the most interesting part of the bill is a group of thirteenth century French folk-songs. Several artists new to this city will assist Mme. Calvé. These are M. Bouxmann, a French basso of much renown in his own land; Berrick von Norden, tenor; Argyro Kastron, violinist; Louis Fleury, flutist, and Camille Décreus, pianist. Mme. Calvé will not appear at the Metropolitan Opera House this season.

AN ENDURING PRIMA DONNA.

Opera singers who find that their voices will stand the strain of no more than two performances a week will stand aghast at a task that has been set for Mme. Gadski when she begins her concert tour. She will be called upon to give an exhibition of endurance that might well daunt any one who has in keeping such an uncertain quantity as a voice. Eight concerts in a week, in five cities, with two orchestras, and with rehearsals interspersed, is what she will be called upon to give.

Immediately after her arrival early next month she will go to Boston and give two concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Then on Monday, Nov. 6, she will appear with that organization in Philadelphia. She will sing in Washington the next evening and in Baltimore on Wednesday. She will take a fast train for Philadelphia the next morning, and will have a rehearsal with the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, and that evening will fill a private engagement in that city. Next afternoon she will appear in concert with the Philadelphia Orchestra. Immediately afterward she will take a special train and will hurry on to Brooklyn, where she will appear with the Boston Orchestra in the evening. Next day she will have a repetition of this performance, for she will sing in New York in the afternoon with the Boston Symphony, and immediately after will take a special train for Philadelphia, where she will have an evening with the Philadelphia Symphony.

Most of the programmes will call upon Mme. Gadski for heavy numbers from Wagner, and these alone, without the wear of railway travel and the lurking dangers therefrom, might appear to furnish sufficient for a week of an opera star. She has been a comfort to the management of the Metropolitan oftentimes, because she could be relied upon when others not so enduring had failed, but if nothing happens to mar her programme her performance will be remarkable.

MISS HAPGOOD'S MUSICAL WORK

The notices of the Russian Symphony Society that are sent out this year bear the signature of Isabel F. Hapgood as Secretary. Miss Hapgood's interest in music has not been very widely made known to the general public before, but no doubt she will make a first-rate Secretary. She is a notable figure in the literary world, where she is distinguished as a translator of many Russian books—several of Tolstoy's, Gogol's, Gorky's, and other authors. She has also translated French, Spanish, and Italian books, and is the author of books relating to Russia and Russian literature, as "The Epic Songs of Russia" and "Russian Rambles." Miss Hapgood was a conspicuous figure in the audience in the concerts of the Russian Symphony Orchestra's previous seasons. Her active work in connection with them is, of course, one of the indications of her interest in and devotion to Russian art in its various manifestations.

STRAUSS'S OPERA, "SALOME."

BERLIN, Oct. 12.—Musicians well informed assert that Richard Strauss's new opera, "Salome," to be given for the first time at Dresden on Nov. 22, will be one of the most interesting features of this year's opera season. An advance piano score of the work has just been published, not intended for the public, but only for the use of the artists who are to take part in the performance. In his text Strauss has followed word for word the original play of Oscar Wilde. He has made no important changes, altering only the figure of the Roman Ambassador Tigellinus. Strauss's idea of translating Wilde's work into music will be followed by considerable discussion. It is said by those who have seen the music of the new opera that the composer has attempted to reproduce the interesting and intoxicating brilliancy of Wilde's words. Ears, however, used to diatonic sounds undoubtedly will be tortured by an abundance of disharmonies, and moral fanatics will fume at the immorality and perversity of the music. Those on the inside speak mysteriously of "an entirely new cult of the erotic," the declamatory power of St. John's speeches, of several magnificent and melodious passages in different scenes. An important part of the opera is still unavailable in the piano text, namely, the dance of Salome.

The part of Salome will be impersonated by Frau Wittich, that of Herod by Herr Burrian, that of John by Herr Perron. These artists ought to be able to do full justice to their parts, so that Strauss will not have to face an experience like that which confronted him ten years ago in Munich, when such famous artists as Ternina, Vogl, and Bruck went on a strike and refused to sing his opera "Guntram." Their refusal created a sensation because Strauss was the chief musical leader of the Munich Royal Opera. The singers demanded the appointment of a musical commission which should decide whether their contracts required them to sing "such stuff." And this commission (consisting of the most conservative musicians of the city on the Isar) decided "No." But while substitutes were found for these combative singers, after the greatest difficulties an inadequate performance of "Guntram" was given. Strauss in an angry mood then left Munich. To-day Richard Strauss is one of the recognized musical authorities, and it is doubtful whether he will again undergo a similar experience. Numerous guests from different parts of the world have already engaged seats for the first performance of the new opera.

INSTITUTE OF MUSICAL ART.

The Institute of Musical Art, which opened its doors for the first time this month, is in a way a public institution. It is the only largely endowed school of music in this country, and there are few in the world that have been so liberally provided with the means of advancing musical culture. James Loeb of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. has established an endowment for it of $500,000, known as the Betty Loeb Endowment Fund. In addition the Trustees have secured from other sources subscriptions of $4,000 a year for a number of years. The Institute is thus made independent financially, and is enabled to set a rigid standard for the development of its pupils, to which they must conform. Thoroughness of preparation and the most dignified artistic aims are upheld in it. The Faculty is composed of some of the most eminent teachers and performers in their several branches.

The school, as has been widely made known, occupies the historic old Lenox mansion once occupied by the founder of the Lenox Library, at Fifth Avenue and Twelfth Street. It is now the property of Thomas F. Ryan, the street railroad magnate. This was a large, old-fashioned residence, and it has been considerably altered inside to suit its new purpose. The former library in which Mr. Lenox kept his literary treasures has been transformed into a concert hall that seats over 500 persons.

An almost unlimited number of pupils can be accommodated. Thirty-four rooms are now available for teaching. In addition there is a large kitchen in use, and luncheon is served every day for those who desire it. The library of music and musical literature is very large and comprehensive, and will be an important part of the equipment. The Director of the Institute is Dr. Frank Damrosch, who has been largely responsible for the creation of the whole enterprise. He has secured a large Faculty, which includes many well-known names. Among them are Mr. Franz Kneisel, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, Mr. Louis Svecenski, and Mr. Julius Theodorowicz, who comprise the Kneisel Quartet, and will conduct the department of stringed instruments; Mme. Etelka Gerster, in her day one of the most famous of operatic sopranos, and Mr. Alfred Giraudet, from the Paris Conservatory, who will teach voice culture. Pianoforte instruction will be given by Mr. Stojowski, formerly of Paris, a pupil of Paderewski, and Mrs. Thomas Tapper, and theory and composition by Dr. Percy Goetschius and Louis Victor Saar. Mr. Damrosch will have charge of the sight singing and chorus work. There is to be a special course on "How to Listen to Music," by H. E. Krehbiel, the distinguished critic and writer on music, designed to cultivate an intelligent appreciation of the highest musical art.

There will be a number of lectures and recitals throughout the year. These will be given in the institute concert hall. There will be recitals by the students themselves, and also by their instructors, including five by the Kneisel Quartet.

Three valuable Brahms manuscripts have just been added through the generosity of Georg Henschel to the libraries of the Institute of Musical Art. Mr. Henschel is the noted composer and singer of Germany and England, now one of the Professors of voice culture and repertory at the Institute. He says in his letter accompanying the gift:

> My Dear Damrosch: I have a great desire to express to you in more than passing words my high appreciation of the spirit in which you are undertaking the huge task of guiding the destinies of the Institute of Musical Art.
>
> May I ask you to kindly accept, perhaps as a possible nucleus for a collection—in the institute's library—of autograph manuscripts of the great masters of the past, the accompanying three of Brahms's songs, (Op. 63,) particularly fine and serious examples of the art of the master who, I know, would have hailed the advent of this new school of our revered art with all the enthusiasm of his generous nature.
>
> Believe me, my dear Damrosch, with every good wish for your continued health and strength, and for the great and ever increasing success of the Institute, sincerely yours,
>
> GEORG HENSCHEL.

The enrollment of the Institute has passed the 325 mark. There is still a considerable number of prospective students for this session.

IN THE MUSIC SCHOOLS.

Plans and Prospects of Some of the Conservatories.

THE New York College of Music, the largest musical college in the city, began its twenty-eighth year on Oct. 12. It is situated at 128 East Fifty-eighth Street. Two years ago this college united with the New York German Conservatory, and they are now conducted by the same Board of Directors, composed of Carl Hein and August Fraemcke.

Here, as elsewhere, there was an increase in the number of applicants at the opening. Nearly 900 enrolled, which is over a hundred more than last year, when, with less than 800 registered in October, 1,100 had joined by the height of the season in March. Mr. Fraemcke, therefore, expects that there will be close to 1,400 by March, 1906. The Directors will continue to award scholarships to those who prove their merit at an examination before a special committee. Forty such scholarships were given last year.

There have been no important changes in the Faculty. Mr. Hein and Mr. Fraemcke are again at the head of the piano department and there is to be a "special training course for those intending to become piano teachers" by August Spanuth. A series of popular evening classes in sight singing and ear training has been started. These classes are designed for those who are unable to attend the college in the daytime. They will meet every Thursday evening at 8 o'clock.

As usual, there will be a number of recitals and musicales given during the year by students, members of the Faculty, and occasionally by other professionals. Twice every three weeks there will be a recital and every third week a lecture. Eight lectures are to be given by Mr. Spanuth. Three will deal with various forms of music, and there will be ons on Chopin, one on Liszt, and thres on Wagner. Carl Fiqué is to give two lectures, one of which will discuss Mendelssohn's piano music. The exact dates for these lectures have not been announced. Both the recitals and the lectures are intended primarily for the students and their families, but they are also open to the public. They will all be held in the concert hall in the college building. It has been the custom of the college to have two opening concerts each Fall. This year they will be held in Carnegie Hall on the evenings of Oct. 29 and Nov. 5. An orchestra will appear at both and among those who will assist are Michael Banner, violin; Miss Elizabeth Schiller, soprano; August Fraemeke, piano, and William Ebann, 'cello. Tickets for these concerts can be secured free of charge at the college and at the leading music stores.

The American Institute of Applied Music, now in its twentieth year, opened about a month ago. This institute was formerly the Metropolitan College of Music, having changed its name in 1900, when it moved to its present situation at 212 West Fifty-ninth Street. More than four hundred pupils have registered, an increase of nearly 25 per cent. over last year. Many people of society are to be found among its students, though the majority are preparing for professional work. The violin department is again under the direction of Herwegh von Ende, and Harry Rowe Shelly of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church has charge of the organ instruction. As in former years, there will be recitals at the institute every Friday night of a more or less informal nature, and at the end of the year the annual concert will be held at Carnegie Hall.

The National Conservatory of Music, which was founded by Mrs. Thurber in 1885, is to celebrate its twentieth anniversary on Sunday, Oct. 29. It occupies the building at 47 West Twenty-fifth Street, to which it moved from its old quarters in East Thirteenth Street on May 1. It offers instruction in all branches of music, and has graduated a number of pupils who have won distinction as musicians. It has also shared in an important episode in American musical history by bringing over Dr. Antonin Dvorak to take charge of its department of composition. He came in 1892, and remained until 1895, in that time producing three important compositions that are inseparably connected with this country—the symphony "From the New World," the quartet and the quintet composed under the same influences. The artistic faculty at present comprises Rafael Joseffy, one of the most distinguished of pianists; Leopold Lichtenberg, the noted violinist; Leo Schulz, famed as a 'cellist; Max Spicker, Adele Margulies, Eugene Dufriche, and Henry T. Finck, the well known critic and writer.

The New York Institute of Music, which is now situated at the corner of Eighty-seventh Street and West End Avenue, in anticipation of an increase in the number of its pupils, has added several new members of the faculty. Miss Bessie B. Clay is the President of the institute and directs its work. Associated with the Institute of Music is the Institute of Fine Arts, under Mr. Edmund Russell, in which there is a class in oil and water color painting, leather work, drawing, and design.

An interesting feature of this college is what is known as the "Home Department." As more and more girls have been coming from places far from New York to study music, there has been a growing demand for their proper accommodation in the city. Accordingly it is now possible to obtain not only musical instruction at the institute, but rooms, board, and chaperonage can be secured. But the care of the visitor does not stop here. Informal teas and receptions will be arranged to which persons prominent in the musical and artistic world will be invited. There are classes in dancing and fencing, and there is also a bowling alley and gymnasium. In other words, a student from the West can secure here many of the advantages and pleasures she would find at a college like Wellesley or Vassar. So far the scheme has proved successful.

One of the newer schools in Harlem, that, like the New York Institute of Music, has felt the need of providing for out-of-town pupils, is the Salter School of Music, which furnishes a residence for students in its building at 554 West 149th Street. Mr. Sumner Salter, the director of the school, will be absent this year. He has been appointed Professor of Music at Williams College, where he is also the organist of the Thompson Memorial Chapel. Mr. Salter's place as teacher of the piano and organ has been taken by Mr. Benjamin Lombard. Voice culture will be given by Mrs. Salter, who will have general charge of the school.

The Grand Conservatory of Music, at 68 West Eighty-third Street, which is still under the management of Dr. Ernst Eberhard, is now entering on its thirty-second season with about 300 students. Most of them will go into professional work of some form or other. To facilitate their entrance into grand opera Dr. Eberhard has formed the Parlor Opera Company, which produces the leading operas at the conservatory. Every month free public recitals are to be given at the Waldorf-Astoria, and at the commencement in June original works by alumni will be performed.

Dr. Eberhard alone, of all the Directors questioned on the subject, took a pessimistic view of the musical situation. He said that it was a mistake to think that the interest in music was increasing; the fact that his conservatory has been running for over thirty years without receiving any bequests proved the contrary. When reminded that several new schools had been started, he replied that there was no need of them, as there was already plenty of places of instruction to supply the demand.

THE PEOPLE'S CLASSES.

The People's Singing Classes and the People's Choral Union that were started by Dr. Frank Damrosch nearly fifteen years ago, have done a work increasing in usefulness as the years have gone on, and the number of applicants that annually demand admittance is but slightly less than it was in the early nineties, when the interest in the novel enterprise was at its height.

The popularity of the Singing Classes has declined somewhat, but the membership in the Choral Union has increased a little over last year. The desire to take part in a large public performance is probably responsible for the greater enthusiasm for the Union.

The Choral Union meets for rehearsals every Sunday afternoon at Cooper Union, under the direction of Dr. Damrosch. Strict account is kept of the attendance of all members, as it is entirely upon the regularity of their appearance that their right to sing in the public concert depends. This annual concert is the goal of the year's work. It is given in April at Carnegie Hall. Last Spring "Elijah" was presented, and this year "St. Paul" has been chosen, and work on it has begun.

The union is intended primarily for graduates of the singing classes, though others may gain admission after passing an examination in sight singing. The dues are 10 cents a week, so that this almost unequalled opportunity to secure the best training in oratorio music is within the reach of all. That the chance is not unappreciated is shown by the fact that over 900 young men and women joined at the opening rehearsal last Sunday.

The singing classes, which form a stepping-stone to the Union, have branches in all parts of the city, as well as in the Bronx, Jersey City, West New York, and Hoboken. All the classes meet either in the evening or on Sunday afternoon. The meetings last an hour, and the dues are 10 cents, as in the Union.

As a rule, each class has about a hundred members at each meeting, though often over twice that number is present. Judson Memorial Hall, on Washington Square, usually secures the largest attendance. The Bronx is not far behind, however, and it has been found necessary to establish a second branch there, the original hall not proving large enough.

All money that is received is devoted to the necessary expenses of hiring the halls, &c. The instruction is given voluntarily by teachers from the public schools who have been personally selected by Dr. Damrosch. No one connected with the classes receives any financial remuneration whatever.

Last year the classes gave a public performance of an oratorio, as well as the Union, but it has been decided to give that up. Accordingly, all the work will be devoted to preparing the pupils for entrance into the Choral Union. In order that none may be afraid to enter the lists, it is expressly stated that no previous knowledge of music is required. All that the teachers demand is regular attendance at the meetings, accompanied by a modest dime.

Those wishing to join should apply at any of the classes before the commencement of the season, or at the office of the People's Choral Union, No. 131 West Fourteenth Street, on any evening, except Sunday, between 8 and 10 o'clock.

Classes will be opened at the following places, at the time stated:

Gregorian at St. Francis Xavier's.

In connection with the introduction of the Gregorian chants into the Roman Catholic churches there is to be an interesting series of public rehearsals this coming Winter. They are given at the suggestion of the music commission of the archdiocese, and the first will be held in the Church of St. Francis Xavier on Sixteenth Street, some time in November, with the Archbishop present as one of the distinguished guests. Examples will be given of the singing of the Gregorian melodies. The rehearsals will be held in the evening and while they are said to be public, admission will be by ticket, and they will be chiefly for the benefit of the organists of the different churches.

There is still much to be learned in this country, and even in this city, about the difficult art of Gregorian music. It differs in so many respects from that of church music as it has hitherto been practiced, that a special training is required for its mastery, and this training is hard to acquire. St. Francis Xavier is fortunate in having an especially accomplished master of the Gregorian plain song in Father Young, who has gone into the subject with great zeal and learning. The series of public rehearsals there will be of great benefit to organists of the various churches in the diocese, for they will there have an opportunity of hearing the Gregorian music sung in a correct and authoritative manner.

The Vatican edition of the Gregorian chants for the mass is now ready for publication, and its appearance is expected at any time.

ITS FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY.

The Arion Society of Brooklyn will celebrate its fortieth anniversary to-night with a festival concert at the clubhouse in Arion Place. "To My Country," by Sinding, will be produced. Miss Olive Mead, the violinist, a professional orchestra, and the full club chorus of 200 male and female voices will take part in the concert. To-morrow night there will be a banquet to which the city officials and the officers of the other large German societies have been invited.

During the year two more concerts of similar character will be given, in January and April, and in the latter month the society is to give a public concert before the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. There will also be frequent smaller entertainments of a more informal nature.

CHOIRS AND CHOIR SINGERS.

Some of the High Salaries—Talk of the Organ Lofts.

THERE has been an unusually large number of young people, young women particularly, looking for church positions this year. New York is the Mecca for the musical aspirant. They come here sometimes to study and sometimes, having finished their studies, hope to continue them with money obtained in lucrative positions to be found in the churches. Every year sees more of them arrive and consequently more who return home discouraged or remain to take up some other profession if money making is necessary. People to whom these young enthusiasts apply for positions say—perhaps a little facetiously, but not altogether in joke—that the bodies of the churches would hardly hold all the applicants for positions if they should once get into them, to say nothing of the choirs.

Rumors of singers who are paid $1,000 and $1,500 a year, this for two services and one rehearsal, not altogether more than a few hours of solid singing, sound promising. Church singers in New York receive this, but there are comparatively few of them. Singers do not wear placards on their backs telling what they receive, and it is supposed to be a delicate matter which is not generally announced, still such things leak out, and occasionally, perhaps, the impression given is a trifle larger than reality. As a matter of fact it is said that there are not more than half a dozen singers in the Greater New York who receive the higher sum. Such well-known singers as Dr. Carl Dufft of the Marble Collegiate Church, Mrs. Shanna Cumming Jones of the Central Congregational, Brooklyn, and Mrs. Mary Hissem De Moss of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church may be among the number, and Ericsson Bushnell, who it was said was offered more than $1,500 to go to the Rockefeller Church, the Fifth Avenue Baptist.

Mrs. De Moss is said to be the best-paid church singer in New York. The New York church having an afternoon service leaves her evenings free and enables her to sing at Calvary Methodist Church, East Orange, where she is said to receive $1,000. There are perhaps a baker's dozen of singers who receive as a total salary $1,000.

The different time of the services at the synagogues is a blessing to many singers and organists. Coming on Friday night and Saturday morning they do not conflict with the regular Sunday services of the other churches, and high-priced singers will frequently take synagogue positions for comparatively little, considering the money so much extra. It works both ways, and the synagogues are the gainers, getting first-class musicians sometimes as low as $250 or $300. The latter sum is about the lowest price at which a solo singer can be obtained.

Even these smaller sums look large to a girl from out of town, especially as church work leaves the week days free. But while many call for positions few are chosen, and there is an increasing number of broken hearts and blighted musical careers in New York every year, and people who are willing to try voices are over-worked.

The temporary structure within the walls of St. Thomas's Episcopal Church will be completed in time for the first service since the fire, to take place on the first Sunday of November. While the services have been suspended the choir has been kept together by weekly rehearsals, and the music will be continued under the new conditions as under the old. One omission in the musical work of the church will be the recitals by the organist, Will C. MacFarlane. St. Thomas had a fine new $25,000 Hutchings organ last year, and upon this Mr. MacFarlane inaugurated a series of twelve recitals which it was expected would be repeated this year. They will be temporarily suspended, however, as the new twenty-stop $8,000 Hutchings organ which will go into the temporary structure will not be equal to the music. The reconstructed St. Thomas, in which another large organ will be placed, will probably not be completed for some years.

All the regular musical festivals will be held, including the rendering of "The Messiah" at Christmas, with the full orchestra and extra soloists. There are a number of weddings scheduled to take place soon, at which there will be full choral services, one of these being that of Miss Fargo, which is to take place on Nov. 8.

Sunday afternoon musical services, which have been a feature at the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Ascension, Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, are to be continued this year, and cantatas and parts of oratorios will be rendered. Charles Heinroth, the organist, has arranged to present part of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" the first Sunday in November; Garrett's "Harvest" will be given on the second, Verdi's "Manzoni Requiem" on the third Sunday, and Brahms's [illegible] on the fourth. There will be a [illegible] organ recitals every month during the Winter, commencing later.

There is an out-of-season change in the choir of the Collegiate Dutch Reformed Church, Forty-eighth Street and Fifth Avenue, which has one of the best quartets in the city, with Mrs. Marie Kunkel Zimmerman, soprano; Mrs. Gertrude Stein-Bailey, contralto; Dr. Ion Jackson, tenor, and Mr. Julian Walker, bass. Mrs. Stein-Bailey has been given a long leave of absence, and Miss Laura Halsted Graves is taking her place until February.

+ + +

The new Tabernacle Baptist Temple has a new organist and choirmaster in Mr. Romaine Callender, who has succeeded Mr. Stanley Addicks.

+ + +

Miss Roth, who was soprano soloist in St. Bartholomew's Church, has taken a position as soloist at St. George's Episcopal Church, of which Homer Norris is organist and choirmaster.

The Vatican orders requiring the use of male voices only in the Roman Catholic churches was so revolutionary that it has not been possible for all the churches to make the changes, and now, a year after the announcement, there are still a few where this has not been arranged satisfactorily. But St. Patrick's Cathedral has set a good example, and at that church they have already had a year's experience in the new order of things. There is always more or less difficulty in making a change in the singers in any church, notably so when difficult masses are to be sung, but there is a leaven which lightens many difficulties—money—and the cathedral is a wealthy church. They made the change in a week's time, and Miss Hilke, the soprano, and Miss Louise Clary, the alto, stepped out one Sunday, and their places were supplied by male voices on the next.

That there was some difficulty in trying to get a substitute for women's voices is shown in the increased number of singers. With the women's voices there was one regular quartet with two extra male voices to assist, while now there are three quartets of professional male singers with a volunteer chorus. The new order of things is as costly as the old, the present soloists being high-priced singers and receiving large salaries. And the result is not satisfactory after all. That is what J. C. Ungerer, the organist, says, and he is hoping something may happen that the order may be revoked.

"Changing to male voices has changed the style of music entirely," says Mr. Ungerer. "It is impossible to get the same effects without women's voices, and then much church music is written for mixed voices, and I should be glad to see the order revoked. The cause of it was the style of the music that has been used in the churches all over the world and the abuses of the system in the character of the people who have been allowed to sing in the churches abroad and particularly in Italy.

"The quality of the music used in the churches has been very poor, of a florid, concert type not at all churchly. The selections have been gradually drifting away from real church music, and it is a pity to let beautiful things fall into oblivion. Ancient music should not be forgotten, and if it is it is only because of the lack of education and knowledge in the organists.

"As a rule in this country they are not competent to handle the organ. People don't like the music because it is abominably done, and they say there is nothing in it. I will admit that it is deep and difficult, but that is no reason why it should be thrown aside, simply because it is not properly rendered. This is a big change altogether, and will take years of education to bring it about properly. People now think they know all about it, and to do anything with it it will be necessary to educate the young."

The boys' choir of the catbedral, which is composed of the young men and boys from the Cathedral College, has always used the Gregorian music. The congregation learned with surprise, when the order came requiring these chants, that they had been listening to them all the time and didn't know it. The modern music is used on the organ and by the regular choir. A new organ for the cathedral is something that is hoped for in the near future to complete the high standard of excellence which the cathedral has in other parts of its music.

St. Bartholomew's New Organist.

St. Bartholomew's Church at Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street will cover a broad field in its music, both for organ and choir, this coming Winter. The new organist, Leopold Stokovski, who was recently called from his London position, is planning a varied programme. In this will be included the music of Russian and Italian composers, of which comparatively little has been used in the churches of this country. English, French, and German music will also be heard. Both ancient and modern composers will be represented, particularly in the Italian and English music. To pay special attention to the music of the country in which he is playing is Mr. Stokovski's policy, and in New York he will see that American composers are well represented.

Leopold Stokovski, New Organist of St. Bartholomew's.

The new organist of St. Bartholomew's is interesting, aside from his musical ability, for his youthfulness. In appearance he is tall, slender, a decided blond in complexion, and looks a boy hardly twenty. He is young, and was only 19 when he was appointed organist at St. James's, which is noted in London as being the church of royalty. He is of Polish-Irish descent, an unusual combination of nationalities, which might be expected to produce clever musical talents. Mr. Stokovski's talent developed early. He was made a fellow of the Royal College of Organists at 16. He studied with Sir Walter Parratt, Master of the King's Music; Sir Charles Villiers Stanford, and Sir Frederick Bridge, organist of Westminster Abbey. He took a Bachelor's degree at Oxford at 21. He is known in London as an orchestra leader as well as organist. He is probably the youngest organist in charge of the music of a large church in this country.

THIS WEEK'S OFFERINGS

MME. KALICH in "MONNA VANNA," a drama, by Maurice Maeterlinck, to-morrow evening at the Manhattan Theatre.

WILLIAM FAVERSHAM in "THE SQUAW MAN," a comedy-drama, by Edgar Milton Royle, to-morrow evening at Wallack's Theatre.

ROBERT B. MANTELL IN A REVIVAL OF "RICHARD III.," to-morrow evening at the Garden Theatre.

"WONDERLAND,"
a musical comedy, by Victor Herbert and Glen MacDonough, Tuesday evening at the Majestic Theatre.

AT THE Manhattan Theatre to-morrow evening Harrison Grey Fiske will bring forward Mme. Kalich as a regular star of the English-speaking stage. The play chosen for the introduction of this actress to her new public is Maurice Maeterlinck's "Monna Vanna," which has never yet been presented in English.

Mr. Fiske is said to have surrounded the star with an exceptionally capable company, and has been at great pains and expense to stage the play in the most elaborate fashion.

The place and period of the action—Pisa, at the close of the fifteenth century—make possible various splendid pictorial effects, and it is promised that these will equal if not surpass anything that has yet been seen on the stage of the Manhattan Theatre. The play of "Monna Vanna" has been presented with brilliant success in nearly all of the important cities of Europe, and through reports of these performances—as well as through the published version of the drama in English—its story is fairly well known to American students of the stage. While it possesses much of the philosophy and symbolism that its author loves, it is rich in human emotion, and contains many situations of extraordinary dramatic strength.

The rôle of Giovanna is said to offer splendid opportunities to Mme. Kalich for the display of her best powers in emotional acting.

The company in the support of Mme. Kalich includes Henry Kolker, Frederick Perry, Henry Jewett, Leonard Shepherd, and Joseph O'Meara.

William Faversham begins an engagement at Wallack's Theatre to-morrow night in Edgar Milton Royle's new play, "The Squaw Man." The piece has met with success on the road, and Mr. Faversham has been given the enthusiastic approval of the provincial cities.

The play, as its name would indicate, deals largely with Western frontier life, although it finds its origin in England, the hero being a member of a noble family who takes upon himself the onus of a crime committed by the master of the house, the husband of the woman he loves. He does this, of course, to save the woman and her family from disgrace, and, fleeing to America, he assumes another name, and seeks to hide himself from his former world in a Wyoming mining camp, or water tank station along the then newly constructed Union Pacific Railroad. In these new associations he shows himself the hero that nature has made of him, and in his subsequent alliance to a pretty and devoted Indian girl and the child that is born to them he gives fresh evidence of his nobility of soul as well as a heroic nature. As time passes, the husband dies, and in a trip through the West with an English party the widow again meets the man she has always loved and who had sacrificed all that life holds dear for her.

This is the basis of the story, which is said to be exceedingly strong in its direct and salient features, and in its interpretation Liebler & Co. have gathered together a strong cast, which includes, among others, Theodore Roberts, George Fawcett, Selene Johnson, W. S. Hart, Hugo Toland, Herbert Sleath, Mabel Morrison, Selina Fetter Royle, Cecil Ward, and an associate company said to number eighty people.

\+ + +

To-morrow evening Robert Mantell, who was most favorably received in New York last season at the Princess Theatre, will begin an engagement in Shakespearean revivals at the Garden Theatre, his first appearance being in "Richard III." Mr. Mantell is being starred under the management of William A. Brady, and that manager promises an elaborate production in connection with tragedy, together with a company that will come up to 350 people.

Mr. Brady has much faith in the success of his star's present engagement, and believes that an opportunity is ripe for a New York appearance. Mr. Mantell has been playing Shakespearean parts for years, and also is a romantic actor of much repute.

The cast includes Marie Booth Russell, Harry Leighton, Gordon Burby, Guy Lindsley, Devore Parmer, Hamilton B. Mott, Giles Shine, Walter Stearns, Emily Dodds, Bella Theodora, Lawrence Gray, Franklin Bendtsin, Edwin Foos, Lorraine and Lelia Frost, Walter Campbell, Harry Kearns, and other well-known people. The entire production will be staged upon a sumptuous scale. In the famous battle of Bosworth scene which occurs at the finale of the last act, the height of stage realism is said to be reached. The battle scene is depicted vividly by a moving panorama, and the services of 350 supernumeraries will be required. During Mr. Mantell's engagement at the Garden he will be seen in magnificent revivals of his former successes, including "Othello," "King Lear," "Macbeth," "Hamlet," "Richelieu," and others in the classic répertoire.

\+ + +

On Tuesday evening, at the Majestic Theatre, "Wonderland," known on the road as "Alice and the Eight Princesses," will have its first New York presentation. The musical comedy is by Victor Herbert and Glen MacDonough, and both are said to have lived up to their reputation in the score and book. To Julian Mitchell has been allotted the task of making the production, and remembering his previous work in "Babes in Toyland," "The Wizard of Oz," and "It Happened in Nordland," one has reason to believe that his part will be something above the ordinary. Beautiful costumes and stage pictures are promised, together with a number of new scenic effects.

The company selected is a strong one, and includes Sam Chip, a comedian whom Mr. Mitchell has found; Eva Davenport, Aimee Angeles, Bessie Wynn, Lotta Faust, James Marlowe, and Charles Barry. Special emphasis is laid on the good looks of the chorus.

PLAYS THAT HOLD.

This is the final week of Mrs. Leslie Carter's revival of "Du Barry" at the Belasco. The following two weeks of Mrs. Carter's engagement will be devoted to "Zaza."

E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe are winning new laurels in "The Taming of the Shrew" at the Knickerbocker, where the theatre has been crowded nightly. The production is beautifully staged.

Plays may come and go, but "Man and Superman," in which Robert Loraine is starring at the Hudson, seems likely to remain for the remainder of the season.

Henry E. Dixey begins his third week at the Madison Square to-morrow night in his new comedy, "The Man on the Box." Mr. Dixey is ably supported by Carlotta Nillson and an excellent company.

"The Prince Chap," having passed its fiftieth performance in this city, is now heading for the one hundredth anniversary. The comedy is now playing at the Joe Weber Theatre.

Even with the addition of the Thursday matinées, the Princess Theatre has proved too small for the people who want to see Margaret Anglin in her admirable performance of "Zira."

The popularity of Maxine Elliott in the Clyde Fitch comedy, "Her Great Match," at the Criterion, does not seem to wane, and the prospect is that the star will remain for some time to come.

"The Virginian" enters on the last week of its brief engagement at the Academy of Music. The audiences have seemed to like the play and the work of Dunstin Farnum.

There is no change in the crowds that go to see David Warfield in "The Music Master" at the Bijou. The comedy continues to bo a substantial success. An extra matinée will be given this coming Thursday.

James K. Hackett and Mary Mannering in "Tho Walls of Jericho" at the Savoy, still continue to play to big houses. Theatregoers seem to like both stars and play.

John Drew in "De Lancey" is drawing near the close of his engagement at the Empire, where he remains for but two weeks more. The comedy has been very successful, and holds its own with later productions.

Joseph Wheelock, Jr., in "Just Out of College," continues at the Lyceum. George Ade has admirably fited Mr. Wheelock with the rôle of a young fellow fresh from the university.

MUSICAL ATTRACTIONS.

Klaw & Erlanger's production of "The Pearl and the Pumpkin," which has had a long run at the Broadway, begins its last week at that house to-morrow evening and will be followed a week hence by "Veronique."

Joseph Cawthorn in the new musical play, "Fritz in Tammany Hall," enters on his second week in the city at the Herald Square to-morrow night. Mr. Cawthorn has made a hit as Fritz.

At the Lew Fields Theatre the performance of "It Happened in Nordland" and the burlesque of "The Music Master" make a pleasing bill for lovers of musical comedy.

De Wolf Hopper has found an excellent vehicle in "Happyland," and it is likely that the engagement at the Lyric will be prolonged throughout the entire season.

The Rogers Brothers in "The Rogers Brothers in Ireland" begin the last week of their profitable run at the Liberty tomorrow evening. Following them Marie Cahill will appear in her new musical comedy, "Moonshine."

This also is the last week of Lulu Glaser in "Miss Dolly Dollars," at the New Amsterdam. On the 30th the Drury Lane spectacle, "The White Cat," will be produced at this theatre.

At Daly's Edna May continues to delight her audiences in the English musical play, "The Catch of the Season." Her songs have all become popular.

McIntyre and Heath in "The Ham Tree" at the New York Theatre continue to be one of the strongest drawing attractions in the city. The popular prices are also an inducement.

There will be no change at the Irving Place, as "Fruhlingsluft" has made a decided hit and has played to the capacity of the theatre at every performance.

WITH THE STOCK COMPANIES.

To put on an elaborate revival of Richard Brinsley Sheridan's "School for Scandal" in one week is no easy task. But that is what F. F. Proctor's all-star Fifth Avenue Theatre company is doing. The famous Sheridan comedy is the bill for next week, with Amelia Bingham as Lady Teazle. She will wear the beautiful gowns and hats built for Lillian Russell in her operatic production of "Lady Teazle" last season. Jessie Bonstelle will be the Mrs. Sterling, originally played by Miss Bingham, and William J. Kelley will play Edward Warden, Wilton Lackaye's original part. Miss Morgan will be Miss Godesby, the part that brought Clara Bloodgood to the fore, and others in the company are Paul McAllister, James E. Wilson, Agnes Scott, Esther Lyon, Gertrude Roosevelt, Harold Hartsell, Robert L. Hill, Sol Aiken, Julian Reed, and others.

\+ + +

"The Two Orphans" will be the attraction at the Yorkville this week. The leading rôles will be played by Mabel Montgomery and Eugene Moore, while the supporting company includes Arthur Buchanan, Louis Algen, David Edwin, and Jack Edwards.

The next attraction at the Murray Hill will be the melodrama "The Great Jewel Mystery," presenting the Russell Brothers. In the piece they are said to have opportunity for their female impersonations.

\+ + +

At the Thalia "For His Brother's Crime" will be presented. Robert Gaillard is the particular star of the melodrama.

\+ + +

The Irish actor Barney Gilmore will play an engagement this week at the Metropolis, presenting Daniel L. Hart's new play, "The Rocky Road to Dublin." The play is said to be full of Irish wit and sentiment.

\+ + +

This week the American will offer a Broadway favorite in the person of Eva Tanguay, who will appear at the head of her own company in the new musical travesty, "The Sambo Girl."

VAUDEVILLE.

Lillian Russell will be retained at Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre as the main feature during the week of Oct. 23. Miss Russell is appearing each week in an entirely new singing specialty, and is also wearing some of her costly new gowns, which have been just forwarded to her from Worth of Paris. Mr. Proctor, as the extra attraction, will present the popular favorites, Joseph Hart and Carrie De Mar, who will offer their one-act musical farce, "The Other Fellow," which is bound to please the large Proctor audiencee. Kitty Traney's circus, the latest European juggling and sporting act, will make its first appearance in America at this house during this week. Others who will appear are: Jean Marcel's Art Studies and Plastiques; Bailey and Austin, eccentric comedians; the Three Yoscary's, European hand-to-hand balancers; Walter C. Kelly, monologuist; Leo Nino, trick violinist; Larkin and Patterson, colored entertainers, and a new set of motion pictures.

\+ + +

Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre will have at the head of the bill for the ensuing week the Little Black Man, a Burmese midget, whose height is 34 inches, weight 20 pounds, and age 23 years. This is his first appearance in America, and the little man, who is not in any sense a misshapen dwarf, but is a physically perfect miniature edition of his sex, will be seen in an original athletic exhibition. A pleasant event on the programme is the return of the favorite comedy acrobats, Rice & Prevost, (bumpty bumps.) Fred Karno's original London Pantomime Comedy Company will be seen for the second and last week in their novel and laughable farce, "A Night in an English Music Hall," or "The Mumming Birds." Herrmann the Great will present some mystifying new tricks of prestidigitation, the Empire City Quartette will begin their second and last week, while Sydney Grant, the Monologuist; Mas Andros with his mannikin performers, Eleanor Falk, Wilson & Barton, singers and dancers, and new vitagraph views fill out the bill.

\+ + +

James T. Powers with the same company and skit, "Dreaming," with which he signalized his return to vaudeville in Harlem last week, will be the principal headliner of the new bill arranged by Manager Percy Williams for the Colonial Theatre, commencing Monday afternoon.

Eva Tanguay as "The Sambo Girl" at the American Theatre.

Other topliners of the new Colonial bill include Nella Bergen, who is announced as the extra feature; Fred Niblo, Pat Rooney and Marion Bent in a fresh arrangement of their singing and dancing medley, and Josephine Cohan and company in the farce, "Friday, the 13th." Other acts include Ferreros, European novelty act; the Welch-Montrose troupe of acrobats, and the Orpheus Comedy Four. New vitagraph pictures will be shown.

\+ + +

At Keith's the Agoust family of jugglers and Will Cressy and Blanche Dayne remain as the top-liners. The rest of the bill is new, and includes the favorite minstrel monologuist, Lew Sully; Snyder and Buckley, instrumentalists and comedians; Arthur Borani and Annie Nevaro in their acrobatic comedy, "Weary Waggles"; Grace Jackson, the Le Pages, in a sensational high-jumping specialty, Holmen Brothers, European bar gymnasts; Corbley and Burke, comedians; Henley and Steele, singers and dancers, and the kinetograph, with current events and real-life comedy in moving pictures. Keith's patrons are always well entertained, no matter at what hour they come, for the performance is continuous from 1 to 11 P. M. every week day, and there is always something well worth seeing on the stage.

\+ + +

A bill that is filled with novelties will be presented by Hurtig & Seamon at their Music Hall next week. Roy Knabenshue, better known as "King of the Air" will be one of the main attractions. Mr. Knabenshue will have his airship on the stage and will give an interesting lecture, explaining his means of navigation. Charmion, who is known as the most perfectly developed woman in the world, will give a physical culture exhibition; Pauline Hall will sing some new songs; and Aida Overton Walker, assisted by Hattie McIntosh and the "Abussinia Girls," will do a singing and dancing act. Others on the excellent bill are Max Waldron, female impersonator; Gracie Emmett and Company in her sketch, "Mrs. Murphy's Second Husband"; Henry and Alice Taylor, equilibristic and shooting experts; John D. Gilbert, comedian; and Green and Green, singers and dancers.

\+ + +

Henry Lee's permanent engagement at the Eden Musée will be begun Monday night at 9 o'clock. At that hour on each week night Mr. Lee will give his famous impersonations of "great men past and present," for the time being paying particular attention to those of the present who are foremost in the New York public mind. Mr. Lee will impersonate Mayor McClellan, Charles F. Murphy, and ex-Gov. Odell for the first time Monday night, and the week following will add other figures prominent in the municipal campaign, notably those of District Attorney Jerome, former Assistant District Attorney Osborne, William M. Ivins, W. R. Hearst, and Big Tim Sullivan. Mr. Lee's characters and dialogue will be changed as frequently as the campaign may demand—nightly if necessary, so that each evening he may give the latest political news like a living newspaper.

At Percy Williams's Alhambra Theatre in Harlem for the week commencing Monday afternoon, Emmett Corrigan and company will be the headline act in "The Card Party." The feature act of the programme is John Hyams and Leila McIntyre in their Herbert Hall Winslow sketch, "Two Hundred Wives." Mlle. Misaka Soga is another important act. Charles Burke and Grace Larue in their medley of song, dance, and jest, "The Silver Moon," in which they are assisted by pickaninnies; the Three Kloess Sisters, Macart's Dogs and Monkeys, Clarice Vance, George Wilson, minstrel, and Toto, a European novelty act are the other offerings. New vitagraph pictures will also be shown.

\+ + +

This week at Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street Theatre, the important act of the vaudeville bill will be "Motoring," Marry Tato's automobile sensation. This is said to be a laughable burlesque of a motor car party traveling. Other acts will be given by John C. Rice and Sally Cohn in "All the World Loves a Lover," Thomas Q. Seabrooke and Jeanette Lowerie, Emma Carus, Charles Gumer and Nellie O'Neill, James J. Morton, Hacker and Lester, Mlle. Celeste, and Cooper and Robinson.

\+ + +

Clark's "Runaway Girls" company will be the attraction at the Circle this week, beginning with a matinée to-morrow. An excellent vaudeville bill is promised to add to the variety.

Mme. Laurens and her lions have been re-engaged for this week at Huber's Museum. Olga, the snake charmer, and Witte, the German giant, are others.

THE HIPPODROME.

"A Romance of a Hindoo Princess" has proved an excellent addition to the programme at the Hippodrome. The gorgeous stage pictures, the picturesque dances, and the plunging elephants all combine to make the new piece a success. "A Yankee Circus on Mars" and the circus are retained.

The company, with a few exceptions, is the same as when recently seen on Broadway at the Herald Square Theatre, where the play ran for about half a year. Hattie Williams remains with the organization, appearing as the Rollicking Girl.

SOUSA AT THE HIPPODROME.

John Philip Sousa, the "March King," with his band, will give the fifth concert at the Hippodrome to-night, having come on by special train from the Pittsburg Exposition. The programme promises to be an exceedingly popular one, and of course the regular Sousa marches, ae encores, will be in evidence. IT'S ODD ABOUT EDIBLES.

IN these days of food trusts and constantly advancing prices for all the common articles of food it behooves man to cast around for new means of supporting life, and the result will undoubtedly be that many animals and fishes now regarded as unfit for food will become common articles of diet. As a matter of fact, man's prejudices and tastes in this direction are constantly changing, and to-day we relish as delicacies things the mere mention of which would have turned a strong stomach a few generations ago.

Persons who have studied the food problem declare that there are very few animals, birds, or fish that are not relished as food in some part of the world. China's ability to support her swarming population is due to the fact that her inhabitants do not scorn to eat a great many things that we regard as unclean. There is no doubt that much of the prejudice of Western peoples against certain forms of food is due to a survival of the belief in the Mosaic law. Even in this country there are many persons not Hebrews who regard pork as unclean, and who will not eat anything that can be classed as reptilian.

If one stops to think for a moment, however, one must see that most of the prejudices which we have both in favor of and against certain articles as food are unjustified. The common fowl is a scavenger of the worst kind, and the lordly turkey is only a domesticated cousin of the vulture. Perhaps if the turkey buzzard were domesticated and cleanly fed he might taste as well and offend the imagination as little.

Down South the terrapin used to be despised as "nigger's food," but to-day it is a delicacy esteemed by the most exacting epicures. The idea of eating a rat a few years ago would have inspired only disgust, and many of the stories of privation in sieges and famines were built upon the necessity of supporting life in this way, but to-day we hear frequently of muskrat banquets, and the little rodent is in a fair way to establish himself as a delicacy.

In the same way our prejudices regarding the food qualities of various kinds of fish are very irrational. Not so long ago sturgeon was considered unfit food for civilized man, but to-day it is esteemed as a delicacy and its roe in the form of caviar brings high prices.

These reflections are comforting when one reads the predictions of learned professors that if wars and epidemics cease the world will be unable to feed the rapidly increasing population. The old world has food supplies that civilized man has not tapped yet, and the best feature of it is that most of these animals and fishes which are now despised, but which have a high nutrituous value, are among the most prolific of the inhabitants of the earth.

Art for the People Versus Popular Art

THE art world of New York is in the condition of an army without commander in chief and general staff, in which organization exists only at certain points having little connection one with another. Here and there a number of artists find each other through the natural affinity that comes from similar experiences at art schools in America or abroad, or through a deeper connection owing to similar views as to the right way of going about to produce their work. But these groups do not extend their influence far, and, moreover, they seem quickly to reach the limits of their action. It often occurs that they lose some of their strongest men, who break away from the society in disgust and flock by themselves in a still smaller nucleus which possesses neither the numbers that carry weight nor the executive minds that know how to accomplish things. Thus the tendency is to split into smaller and smaller bodies, the older societies losing the natural energy supplied by new blood.

In fact it is like the army of the Middle Ages in Europe which had splendid material but no coherence because it had not learned to obey its leaders. Recruited at haphazard, it was not animated by the same spirit, did not pursue the same ideal, and had no thoroughgoing plan of organization which made of it a solid fabric with brain and members ready to work at the brain's command.

There was a critical moment when it seemed likely that the graphic and plastic art of New York would crystallize after a fashion round the National Academy of Design. That was when the Academy was offered a building adjoining the Society of American Artists in West Fifty-seventh Street. It seemed at that time as if the opportunity had been offered the Academy to take the lead at any rate in painting and sculpture and so establish itself as to impose on the imagination of the public and really make the fine arts what they naturally should be, a part of the ordinary life and thought of a great community. The opportunity was given and put aside. Since then the situation has not at all improved; quite the contrary.

There is something confusing to the public in the multiplicity of exhibitions, and there is also futility, on purely physical grounds, in offering to busy men and women so many feasts. Discovering that they have no time to visit one-quarter of the shows, a good many people make up their minds to omit them entirely, and so arrange their lives without them, just as they may cut out baseball and other athletic games, or determine to put music out of their lives. If, however, there were one part of the Winter season devoted to the fine arts and one place established therefor, the citizen would soon accept that time and place as proper to the fine arts and form the habit of attendance. Were the artists organized to deliver one grand exhibition once a year in a place large enough to accommodate a multitude, it would alter matters very materially in the attitude of the public toward art. Not so instructive to the serious student as a number of small exhibitions scattered through the Winter might prove, it would be more practical and educative to the general public, because only by this means can wider circles be reached.

What's the use of a hundred art shows, scarcely visited at all save by the exhibitors, their friends, and a few outsiders, when comparison is made with the crowds that visit such a comprehensive gathering of work as the Paris Salon? True it is, that these big collections necessarily contain much indifferent work. The majority of objects shown are really painful to connoisseurs; but the latter can select the gems and the crowd can enjoy what the crowd understands. At any rate, art which is good up to a certain standard is presented in a quantity which impresses the public and forces it to recognize at least the existence of art. In New York energy is frittered away by the various societies with their several appeals to the public—and the public ends by ignoring the very existence of art.

Such conditions might have passed with little comment while New York was still a provincial place, despite its commanding position with regard to the rest of the Union. But since it has become in population the equal of some of our great States and some of the little kingdoms in Europe—Holland, for example—it is a reflection on the citizens of New York that no concerted move is made to correct the anomaly. Private beneficence has widened the sphere of music so that the people can hear the best at the people's prices, and now a college for musicians has been started with the necessary endowment, so that tuition will not press too heavily on pupils. It is right enough that music should lead the way, because it appeals relatively to more citizens, and for its enjoyment requires less preparation than the fine and kindred arts. The city does something for the dead arts and crafts in helping to sustain the Metropolitan Museum and for natural sciences in subventions for the Museum of Natural History and other foundations. Why should not the city regard the art of to-day as a proper object of encouragement directly in the line of education for the city?

Regarding this question from the comparative side, one may wonder how it comes about that other good causes should have been preferred and nothing done by the city to foster art, beyond the very superficial and inadequate attention given to manual training and drawing in the public schools. Usually one sees a community in which artists of all sorts and degrees of talent swarm aware of their presence, at least apparently, and showing certain signs of contentment over their existence, if not of local pride and parochial vanity on their account. If in addition it be shown that New York gains great sums annually through the brains and industry of her artists and artisans, the mystery deepens. How comes it that our wise men do not perceive the opportunity New York has to grasp and by the expenditure judiciously of ample funds place this city for all reasonable time to come at the head of the fine and industrial arts on this side of the Atlantic?

The answer may be sought in the obsession of politics, which exhausts the energies and sterilizes the brains of the most active citizens, so that our temporary rulers have no time, even when they have inclination and training, to look after the best interests of the city in a farsighted way. The Metropolitan and the Natural History Museum had to start as private foundations and build themselves up to the point when legislators were forced to take them seriously and listen to their claims on the public purse as organizations following out a special line of education for the people. So far there has been much talk of organizing the chief societies of artists into a coherent body and raising funds for a common centre of energy; but no single citizen and no one body of public-spirited citizens have taken hold of the matter with the energy and acumen needful to produce results.

An art palace at an accessible spot on Manhattan below Central Park would be a long-headed investment for New York City. There need be no fear that in such a building art for the people would degenerate into what is derisively called popular art; that is to say, poor and trashy art. Unless the men and women chosen to guide it were above such things, it is not likely that the art palace ever would exist. As a centre for exhibitions of architecture, sculpture, painting, landscape gardening, &c., as a place for occasional extensive exhibitions of industrial art, and particularly as a structure designed for an annual comprehensive show of fine art and the most artistic work by craftsmen, such a foundation would benefit New York in a hundred different ways, strengthening the hands of students and teachers, widening the sympathies of the public, educating professionals and laymen, and bringing to the city artists and art lovers from every State in the Union. As of old we used to export to Mexico and South America our clocks and pianos and furniture, our carriages, locomotives and frigates, so to-day we are beginning to furnish those countries with art works, more especially with monumental statues. From the aesthetic side there is a great field for argument in the use of public money to help living art in this community, but on the practical side arguments can be found in abundance which might convince the verliest Philistine that such expenditures will "pay."

The proposition might well be made to the municipality by the Fine Art Federation that a site and building should be provided below Central Park in which the most necessary functions of a big "nation" of artists and artisans could be carried on for the benefit of the public. The cost of a couple of armories would cover the expenditure, and the difference between sterile energies used as preparations for defense against internal and foreign aggression—and live, creative energies employed for the improvement of education and the ennoblement of the city, is sufficiently obvious. While the need of armories and arsenals is clear enough, equally clear is the greater importance of education. Toward refinement and the higher education citizens ought to steadily set their steps.

CHARLES DE KAY.

For a Supreme Court of Amateur Sport

THAT spirit of unrest which is evident among those interested in athletics is due in a large measure to the fact that there is no general governing body to which the disputes upon various matters related to sport may be submitted. Surpassing all other nations as the United States is doing to-day in its devotion to athletic sports and pastimes, the need of such an organization becomes of paramount importance. The entry of President Roosevelt into the much-discussed matter of football brutality and his calling together for conference the football authorities of the leading universities devoted to the sport indicate that even with the Intercollegiate Association there is an absence of unity. Not only is this evident in football, which is the sport of the hour, but it is also clearly in view among the track athletes. Several of these recently overruled the decision of the Amateur Athletic Union, supposed to have authority and jurisdiction over them, and by applying to the Supreme Court forced their entry into championship games, and by so doing materially changed the result of these important competitions.

Such a condition of affairs has long held the attention and study of those who were not only interested in but proud of the achievements of Americans in the line of sport. To many of these the recent interest shown by President Roosevelt, not only in the football matter but by becoming an officer of the great Public Schools Athletic League, an organization which bids fair to become National in its scope seems to have opened a way for the solution of this problem that is vexing all of the Americans to whom sport and all that pertains to it are of vital importance. The suggestion of these interested sport-lovers is nothing less than a National Board of Review, which will include within its scope and jurisdiction absolute power over all sports and pastimes. It will be the court of final resort in this country, and there will be no appeal from its decision.

The working out of this problem, stupendous though it appears at first glance, is not as difficult as might be supposed. During the past week, experts who have thoroughly discussed the matter are convinced of the feasibility of the plan proposed, and even go further in declaring that unless some National governing body is instituted in this country much of the ferment now noticeable in certain branches of sport will lead to disruption and possibly to degrading professional practices of such a nature as to reflect unpleasantly upon Americans taking part in international events.

The plan for such a National Board of Review as has been suggested contemplates either fifteen or twenty-one members. Naturally these gentlemen must represent all that is untainted and unsullied in American sporting annals. Showing his interest as he has recently in subjects of this sort, President Theodore Roosevelt naturally would be chosen for the first place upon this National Board of Review. From those who are in a position to know, it is said that President Roosevelt would accept a place on such a board, feeling that because of its unlimited power it could work greatly for the good and upbuilding of all that is to be desired in American athletics and sports. Naturally on such a board the important colleges and universities must have a place, because in them the effort is made to keep sport upon a high and dignified plane. President Hadley of Yale, President Eliot of Harvard, and President Wilson of Princeton form a triumvirate that is closely in touch with sport, and because of their relation to the universities would be unbiased in the rendering of decisions.

Of course, should it be impracticable for any of these gentlemen to accept places on the National board, there are still such representative men available as Julian Curtis, who has always stood for all that is clean and good in athletic sports for Yale; George B. Morrison of Harvard, and H. L. Geyelin of the University of Pennsylvania. For the Western representation President Harper of Chicago University becomes the most desired representative, with possibly the President of the University of Michigan. Going even further West and holding to the collegiate representation, the board would include the President of Leland Stanford University in California. The South would secure its representation through the head of the University of North Carolina, a university, by the way, which is proving to be a great factor in the development of all that is good in sports and pastimes in the South. Of course, Columbia University would receive its representation through President Butler.

But it must be recognized that in no sense would it be proper or feasible to give the university athletes an unwieldy representation on such a National body in control of sport. There is much in sport to which the college man pays no attention whatever, or at the best but scant attention. The athletics rapidly growing in point of interest in this country find only a small fraction of devotees among college men. Among those who are closest in touch with this non-college element are James E. Sullivan, the secretary-treasurer of the Amateur Athletic Union; F. B. Pratt, Chairman of the Governing Committee of the Athletic League of the Young Men's Christian Association; Gen. George W. Wingate, the President of the Public Schools Athletic League; and Dr. Luther Halsey Gulick, who is also an officer of that organization. The athletic representation would certainly be incomplete did it not include William Greer Harrison of the Olympic Athletic Club of San Francisco, the oldest athletic club not only in this country but in the world. With a large body of Canadian athletes along our northern borders who are frequently in competition with the best of this country, it would only be proper to have the Canadians represented along this line, and the name which most readily presents itself is that of President Gorman of the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union.

Continuing the list in various branches of sport the names suggested for the board include George J. Gould as a representative polo player, James Pilkington for the sport of rowing, and Caspar Whitney, whose splendid work for all amateur sports and pastimes and intense dislike for all that is unmanly and unprofessional in them, readily entitle him to be named as one of the members of this "supreme court" of sport. Probably no one better qualified on all yachting matters could be found than Commodore Bourne of the New York Yacht Club, and holding the same relation to their favorite sports would be Ransom H. Thomas of the Golf Association of the United States and Elliott C. Lee of the American Automobile Association.

The selection for the lawn tennis representation might be made from either Dr. James Dwight, President of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association; Palmer E. Presbrey or Dwight F. Davis of St. Louis, the latter the donor of the international challenge cup now held by the British. An important factor in American sports and pastimes, and one which must be considered in the make-up of the National board, would be a representative of the North American Gymnastic Union, and several kindred organizations.

The influence of a National board of this character, dealing with every phase of athletics, could only be made effective by holding its members together for a term of years. Those who have given most careful study to the matter set the term of office at five years, giving to the board the power to fill vacancies and to elect its own officers. With such sweeping National representation the work of the board could certainly be made far reaching for good, especially with President Roosevelt at its head, as all of the individual associations devoted to the various branches of sport would most assuredly recognize its power and go on record as accepting its authority to pass upon all disputed cases brought before it.

Such a board would be the inauguration of a campaign in this country for clean and gentlemanly sport. The football practices which have recently created no end of discussion, much feeling, and unpleasant dispute could be settled by a body such as has been outlined. Just in this one department may be seen what great power it is intended to give this National board in its work for the purification of sport. The work of this National board would distinctly define the position of all those competing in the various branches over which it had jurisdiction in this country. It would not take up matters of discussion unless they were brought before it by those interested, and where a final verdict was wished outside of the regular body governing the particular sport in dispute.

As an instance of what might be accomplished, it would have been possible to have clearly defined the position of Ten Eyck, either as an amateur or a professional oarsman, at the time his entry was refused by the Henley Regatta Stewards. Even the best informed oarsmen are to-day at odds over this Ten Eyck matter. The National Board of Review, such as is outlined here, could have reviewed the Ten Eyck incident and rendered a verdict upon the evidence submitted which would have once and for all time set Ten Eyck in his proper place in the eyes of his countrymen. This is especially true of any refusal of an American entry by the Henley Regatta Stewards, because under their rules it is not necessary for them to state the grounds upon which the entry is refused. In this and in many other ways would the working of this National Board of Review improve the condition of American sports and pastimes that its organization is greatly to be desired.

The point is also frequently made in this country that the definition of an amateur is not clear, and that rules for eligibility and age limit and length of competition vary in so many ways that, while a man may rate himself as an amateur in one sport the conditions of another might properly be read as making him a professional. A straightening out of these tangled and contradictory conditions and rules might readily be taken up by the National Board of Review, and if its work actually were to cease with a solution of this vexed and hotly discussed problem it would have achieved a great boon for Americans.

In its official capacity the board would have an annual meeting, and at other times such matters as were brought before it could be arranged by correspondence and the mail vote. Its influence for good can readily be gauged by the calibre of the men suggested for its make-up. All are men liberally disposed toward athletics and sports, and, above all, are beyond the pale of any possible prejudiced influence that might be brought to bear in the rendering of decisions. Those who read the signs of the hour aright in the sporting world voice their opinion that the need is great and the time ripe for the formation of this body. Upon its successful achievement and organization much of the excellent promise of things to come in American sports and pastimes depends.

An Italian Artist and the German Crown Prince

Berlin, Oct. 10, 1905.

ALDO SQUANCI, a young Italian sculptor, at present in Berlin, tells an interesting story of how he came to make the only bust for which the German Crown Prince consented to sit. The artist became acquainted with the heir to the German throne in the following manner: He was sitting in a restaurant in Florence, drinking beer and talking with a number of friends. Two young officers, looking like Germans, entered and sat down at a neighboring table. One of these men took out a pencil and began to make a sketch of Squanci, who has a rather peculiar face. Squanci, following suit, took out his notebook, and did similar work. The young officer noted the fact, beckoned to the artist, and asked him to sit down at his table. After a time Squanci became aware that he was talking to the Crown Prince. The young men conversed for several hours, and at the end of the evening the future Kaiser promised to sit for the artist the next morning.

Signor Squanci was more than pleased at the thought of his royal commission. He was, in fact, so pleased that he spent the early part of the morning visiting friends to tell them of his good luck. He arrived home, however, just in time to see the royal carriage depart around the corner. He ran after the vehicle and stopped it, and the Crown Prince came back with him. That was the first of ten sittings, the last of which, on the morning of his departure, Prince Frederick William granted at 7 o'clock in the morning rather than to disappoint the artist.

"I hope to see you again at Potsdam," were his parting words.

When the bust was completed Squanci decided to come to Berlin to deliver it to the Crown Prince in person. He did not know that Potsdam was some distance from the German capital, and so with the bust in arm he searched in vain until he was told that it would be necessary to go to the palace by rail. As luck would have it, when Squanci arrived before the Neue Palais in Potsdam he saw the Crown Prince drive through the grounds. The artist was at once recognized, the Crown Prince gave him a hearty welcome, and asked him to enter the carriage. In the palace Squanci was honored in every way, was asked to choose a niche best suited to his work, and servants were called to carry out his directions and place the bust in the proper position.

SOCIETY AT HOME AND ABROAD

THERE is little material just now out of which to compile a social calendar, if events in town are taken into consideration. Society is in the suburbs. The frequent trips to town are mere incidents. It is true that a few houses are open, and there have been some charming little dinners and some jolly parties to the play. The Autumn weddings have been many and brilliant, and the month of November will be again filled with these joyous happenings. The postponement of the departure of the Duchess of Marlborough has given scope for entertaining. Yesterday Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly had the Duchess as their guest at Florham. She is to remain over to-day, and is booked to sail on Tuesday. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Sr., are expected to arrive at Idle Hour this week. Mrs. William R. Travers, Mrs. Vanderbilt's sister, has been in town about a fortnight.

The season at Tuxedo has been unusually gay. There are many débutantes in the Tuxedo set this year. Among them are Miss Eleanor Mortimer, a younger Miss Kane, Miss Gilbert, and Miss Frelinghuysen. The famous All Hallow E'en ball is scheduled for Oct. 27. Amos Tuck French will lead the cotillion, and Miss Pauline French, who was one of the débutantes of last Summer at Newport, will be among the buds of the evening. Mr. and Mrs. French will come to New York later, and there will be much entertaining for their daughter among a large circle of relatives.

\+ + +

There will be no large weddings this week. The interest will all centre in the country, in house parties, and in riding to hounds. Chicago will have its horse show, and Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, who have been at Kansas City, will take that in before returning to New York and Portsmouth. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Field have arrived from Europe, and have been a few days in New York before going to Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Field, it will be remembered, were married in London in September. Mrs. Potter Palmer will be in New York a short time this Winter. She will, however, have another season in London, where she has made many friends and quite established herself.

\+ + +

Election day is to bring as a social diversion the pony races and steeplechase at the farm of Gould Brokaw, at Great Neck, L. I. Yesterday was a field day for outdoor sports, with the United Hunts Racing Association meeting at Morris Park and the Jockey Club races at Mount Pleasant Stock Farm, Orange. There is promise of a hunt ball at Goshen later on. The Lenox season has been gay, notwithstanding numerous setbacks. In the past two months several prominent families there have been thrown into mourning. Following the death of Miss Ethel Cram came that of Mr. Cook, the father of Mrs. Charles de Heredia. The late Mr. Cook and his wife and Mr. and Mrs. de Heredia have been known at Lenox for their bountiful hospitality and the beautiful entertainments which they gave.

At Ardsley on the Hudson there have been charity concerts, and all along the banks of the river there has been lavish entertaining at the various country seats. Col. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor have had house party after house party, and Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills, who are to have Prince Louis of Battenberg and his suite as guests, have been most hospitable this Autumn. Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt and Mrs. Ogden Goelet have not arrived as yet. The Duchess of Roxburghe has been thrown into deep mourning by the death of Lady Isabel Innes Ker, her sister-in-law, who will be remembered as the tall, handsome girl who was here as one of the bridesmaids. Lady Isabel Innes Ker was married last Autumn to a Captain in the Guards. It will also be remembered that the Grand Duke Cyril, who was in this country two years and was the guest of Mrs. Ogden Goelet, has married one of the daughters of the late Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, the Princess Victoria Melita, who is divorced from the brother of the Princess Louis of Battenberg. The Princess Louis, of course, will not join her husband in New York. She will remain abroad.

\+ + +

Weddings and débutantes are the matters of most interest for the future, if there is excepted the visit of the British fleet. The débutantes will even exceed in number those of last Winter, and every day a new name is added to the list. Miss Edith Pulitzer and Miss Frelinghuysen and Miss Pearson are among those last mentioned. From Horse Show week until the first meeting of the Junior Cotillion there will be given a series of teas and small dances for the débutantes. Mrs. Baldwin is to take a New York house for the Winter for the purpose of introducing Miss Edith Deacon, who has already made her bow at Newport. And there are, of course, Miss Sadie Jones and Miss Dorothy Whitney, and Miss Pauline French, Miss Welles, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Welles, and Miss Pell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howland Pell, are to be introduced at handsome entertainments. Mrs. H. Mason Raborg is to give a coming-out reception for her daughter, Miss Livingston, at the Metropolitan Club Annex. Miss Annie Kountze, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Kountze, and Miss Dorothy Kissel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kissel of Morristown, are also among the list of débutantes for this Winter. Miss Josephine Flagg, daughter of Mrs. W. Allston Flagg, and Miss Julia Freeman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Morgan Freeman of 37 West Fiftieth Street, will also make their débuts. Miss Flagg was at Newport this Summer. Mrs. W. Watts Sherman will bring out her two daughters, the Misses Irene and Mildred Sherman. Miss Vera Gilbert, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Pierrepont Gilbert, will be another débutante, and there are yet many others.

\+ + +

One of the events of last evening was the bachelor dinner of Franklin Butler Lord, Jr., who is to marry Miss Lillian L. Fordyce Barker on Monday, Oct. 30, at Grace Church. Miss Barker has chosen some pretty girls as attendants. Miss Jessie Sloane will be her maid of honor, and the bridesmaids the Misses Violet D. Cruger, Ruth Twombly, Virginia Murray, Margaret G. Dix Douglass, and Martha Cook. Charles L. Lawrence will be best man, and the ushers will be the Messrs. W. W. White, Buell Hollister, Murray Witherbee Dodge, Seton Porter, Lawrence B. Rand, Shelton Whitehouse, Courtlandt P. Dixon, second, Payson McMerrill, and Clarence H. Young.

\+ + +

A large wedding of the week will take place in Newark. It will be that of Miss Annie Nye Jackson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip N. Jackson, to Lewis Stevens of Hoboken. This will take place in the Third Presbyterian Church on Saturday, and on Nov. 1 Miss Edith A. Jackson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip N. Jackson, will be married to Thatcher M. Adams, Jr., of this city.

On Tuesday and Wednesday mornings and afternoons, there will be a sale of hats in aid of several charities at the residence of Mrs. Richard Irvin, 1 West Thirty-ninth Street. Among those who will act as saleswomen are Mrs. Ernest Iselin, Mrs. Harry H. Duryea, Mrs. Louis Lee Stanton, Mrs. Henry C. Beadleston, Mrs. Henry Alexander, Mrs. William P. Douglas, the Misses Georgette and Alice Borland, Rosamund Street, Adelaide Randolph, Sibyl Douglas, and Marion Kemp. The hats will be offered at prices ranging from $8 to $20, and will be the product of the industry of certain fair amateur milliners who have been busy at the residence of Mrs. Irvin for the past fortnight, making these confections.

Until the Horse Show the Hot Springs of Virginia continues to be popular, and relay after relay of New York society will go there for the waters and the rest. Mr. and Mrs. William B. Leeds, Mrs. Henry Clews, Mrs. John J. Emery, and Mr. and Mrs. Jules Vatable are among the more recent arrivals. Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish was at the springs for a short time, but she has returned to Garrisons-on-Hudson for the remainder of the Autumn season. Mr. and Mrs. Harry S. Lehr are making a series of visits in Philadelphia and Baltimore, and they may wind up at the Springs with Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs and Mr. and Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont.

\+ + +

Newport still continues popular with a few who intend to remain there until the last leaf has fallen and frost and snow are on the ground. Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Wysong are among those who are staying late. Their home in New York is just now in the centre of building operations, and life is extremely unpleasant there. Miss Gladys Vanderbilt returned, after a stay in New York and in New Jersey, from the wedding of her cousin, Miss Webb, to Mr. Pulitzer. Miss Cynthia Roche has been at Mrs. John Jacob Astor's, and is now back in Newport. It is expected that she will be among the guests at the house party given in honor of Prince Louis of Battenberg by Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills.

\+ + +

Rumors continue to float as to engagements. It is natural that so prominent a young woman as Miss Vanderbilt should be the subject of innumerable guesses. Just now it is said that James M. Waterbury, Jr., has the lead. Rumor also persists, after numerous denials, in mating Miss Cynthia Roche and Ogden Mills, Jr. One of the Misses Mills is said to be engaged to an Englishman of title, and Miss Burden the younger is also said to have made a conquest on the other side of the water. The Burdens will return in November. Whatever engagements may be on the tapis will not be announced until Horse Show week. Short engagements are now the rule of the day, and surprises are sprung on every side.

\+ + +

Mr. and Mrs. George W. Vanderbilt have returned to Biltmore, where they will remain for the Winter. The news of the death of Mrs. McNamee, who was a Miss Lord, has been received with sorrow and regret by a large circle of friends. Mr. McNamee for years was in charge at Biltmore as the agent of Mr. Vanderbilt. He is his cousin and a descendant of Capt. Jacob Vanderbilt of Staten Island. Mr. and Mrs. McNamee lived at Biltmore for a long time.

\+ + +

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Vanderbilt have purchased a part of the old Drayton estate, which they have added to their own at Hyde Park on Hudson. Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt will open their town house only for a short season as they expect to go South in January. Mr. and Mrs. Laurens Van Alen are at Newport and Mrs. Thomas Howard is at Hyde Park on Hudson. Mr. and Mrs. William Jay Schieffelin have returned from Bar Harbor, and are at their home, 5 East Sixty-Sixth Street, for the season. Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard is at Scarborough on Hudson. She has returned from Shelburne Farms.

\+ + +

M. J. Newhouse has sailed for England. Mrs. Newhouse will not come to America this winter. Hwafa Williams is in New York. He has been attending the races at Belmont Park. The Viscount and Viscountess Maitland will be in New York this Winter. They have taken a house here for the season. They arrived from England on Thursday.

\+ + +

Miss Callender and Miss De Forest have returned from Bar Harbor and are settled in their apartment in the Tuffany Building. They will give the usual number of Sunday afternoon musicales this year. These, as in other years, will be informal. Other recent arrivals in town include Mr. and Mrs. John R. Drexel, Mr. and Mrs. George Gould, who are keeping open both the Lakewood house and the town residence, and who usually pass the week end at Georgean Court; Miss Helen Gould, Mr. and Mrs. Richard T. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Burden, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Dyer, Jr. Mr. and Mrs. George L. Rives are to pass the Autumn at Tuxedo. Mrs. James Brown Lord has arrived there from Europe. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Collier are at their residence in Gramercy Park, but as yet neither Mrs. Stanford White nor Mr. and Mrs. Poor have opened their houses in the same locality. Mrs. Abram Hewitt and the Misses Hewitt are at Ringwood.

Coat costume of white cloth. The coat shows much openwork embroidery through which the green silk lining shows.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

MRS. GLEN COLLINS, a picture of whom may be found in the Pictorial Supplement, has just returned from abroad with her mother, Mrs. Spotswood Schenck, and her little boy, the latter some six months old.

Mrs. Collins was Miss Nathalie Schenck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Spotswood Schenck, and granddaughter of the late Matthew Morgan. Her father was a member of the old Schenck family of Brooklyn, but Miss Schenck and her mother have never been affiliated with Brooklyn. When a school girl and during the Spanish-American war Miss Schenck started an endless chain letter that led to bushels of letters being sent to the Post Office of the small Long Island resort where she and her mother were spending the Summer, and the newspapers devoted much space and related many amusing anecdotes connected with Miss Schenck's endless chain letter, which brought in many, many dollars for the soldiers.

Later Miss Schenck made her début in New York. She and her mother then lived with the latter'a mother, Mrs. Morgan, on Lexington Avenue. Miss Schenck was an intimate of Miss Cathleen Neilson, Miss Laura Swan, and others of the Newport set, and with her mother spent her summers at that resort. She became a favorite with Mrs. George Gould, and was often her guest at Lakewood.

It was at Lakewood that she met the Englishman whose cards stated that he was Capt. C. Glen Collins of the British Army. He was the guest of Mr. Gould for a short time, being interested in polo. He met his future bride at Lakewood just once. Some months later Miss Schenck with her mother and others sailed for Europe, the guests of Eugene Higgins on his yacht Varuna. The yacht touched at Gibraltar, and there the landing Americans came across Glen Collins. It was the second time Miss Schenck had met him. He proposed within twenty-four hours from the Gibraltar landing, and was accepted.

After traveling some time in Europe the Schencks returned to New York and with them came Glen Collins. They spent but two days in town and started at once for California, for the benefit of his health, and at Monterey, Cal., the marriage was celebrated in May, 1904. The two started on their honeymoon tour to the Far East via Honolulu, but while there met with a slight accident which temporarily injured Mrs. Collins, and they returned to this country, visiting in Newport, and then went abroad. Since then Mrs. Collins has spent most of her time in Paris with her mother. It appeared that Glen Collins was not all that he claimed. Mrs. Collins has returned to this country without him, and is being made much of by her friends.

In appearance she is rather tall, with golden brown hair, large blue eyes with dark lashes and brows, and a remarkably white skin. Her features are of exquisite regularity, her nose in particular being absolutely straight and delicately chiseled. Her hair has grown darker, and her figure, formerly too full for so young a girl, is as youthful as her face. She has always been considered one of the beauties of New York society, and is even handsomer now than before her marriage. She was one of the attendants at the Vanderbilt-Neilson wedding, and has always been prominent in the so-called smart set.

\+ + +

Mrs. George Crackenthorpe, who, costumed as Louise Queen of Prussia, may be found in the pictorial section, was one of the American beauties who dazzled London last season, and by many was said to be the most beautiful American of all. She is a daughter of Gen. Sickles, and inherits much of the Spanish type of beauty from her mother.

\+ + +

An excellent likeness of Mrs. Woodbury Kane appears in the Supplement. Mrs. Kane is one of the universally popular women in society. She is gay and engaging rather than handsome, and was a great belle before she married Duncan Elliot a number of years ago. She was Miss Sallie Hargous, and a sister of Mrs. George B. De Forest, whom she closely resembles, and of Robert Hargous, who has lived much abroad, especially in Venice. She is of Spanish descent, and was a wealthy girl. Her marriage to Duncan Elliot was a smart affair. The marriage, however, did not result happily, and the greater portion of society sided with Mrs. Elliot.

After more or less trouble Mrs. Elliot sued for a divorce, and it was granted her; this was several years since. After a time she went out a great deal. Men and women both liked her. She was jolly and wholesome. Her engagement to Woodbury Kane, one of Roosevelt's Rough Riders, was rumored and denied, but suddenly at Aiken, S. C., a few months ago, during the last season there, their marriage took place very quietly. They spent the past Summer at Newport.

Mrs. Kane has a child or two by her first husband, and they were given into her custody.

Woodbury Kane is a brother of De Lancey Kane, and was supposed to be a confirmed bachelor until his marriage to Mrs. Elliot took place.

Mrs. Elliot is of middle height, plump figure, and Spanish coloring, large black eyes, and quantities of black hair, with a deep olive complexion.

\+ + +

The Countess of Yarmouth, whose picture may be seen in the pictorial section, is another pronounced brunette. The Countess was Miss Alice Cornelia Thaw, a daughter of the late William C. Thaw of Pittsburg and a sister of Harry Thaw and half-sister of Benjamin Thaw. The marriage of Miss Thaw to the Earl was strongly opposed by all her family save her brother, Harry Thaw, but at the last moment he failed to appear at the wedding. The Earl, however, was persistent in his endeavors to wed the beautiful heiress, and in time her mother's consent was given, but not until Miss Thaw's decision was found to be final.

The ceremony took place on April 27, 1903, in Calvary Church, Pittsburg. There was a delay of three-quarters of an hour at the wedding, said to have been occasioned by some hitch in the marriage settlements. After their wedding the Earl and his bride soon sailed for England, and she has visited here but once since.

The Countess of Yarmouth is a handsome young woman of middle height, slight but rounded figure, and has soft black hair and eyes and a very white skin. She is simple and unaffected in her manners. Her brother, Harry Thaw, married in April of this year Miss Evelyn Nesbit, who had been a model and also on the stage in a minor capacity. Mr. Thaw gave a dinner in Paris several years ago, which was said to have cost $20,000, and for some years has been noted as a spender of money.

Miss Louise Sayre Woodruff, a charming picture of whom appears in the Pictorial Supplement, is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wilbert Woodruff of Low Terrace, Staten Island. Her engagement to Sims Gill Wylie, a son of Mrs. Gill Wylie of this city, was announced in September.

Princess robe of Alice blue chiffon broadcloth with cape top of panne velvet. Folds of velvet piped at the top with darker blue soutache braid trim the tunics. Old silver cabuchons appear on the top. Blue beaver hat, lighter blue bird of paradise plume.

Fashionable Fabrics.

THE manifold uses and the smartness of mohairs have led to manufacturers putting them on the market in heavy weights for Autumn and even Winter wear. Sicilians and brilliantines may be procured in rich and dark shades suitable for even the coldest weather. The dust-shedding properties of the smooth, shining surface of mohairs is not less called for in Winter than in Summer, for Winter winds are worse dust conveyors than anything New Yorkers experience in the Summer months. Where snow falls and lies this quality is not necessary.

Mohairs for street costumes for walking and shopping and general utility cannot be improved upon, and as they come in stripes, checks, plaids and other designs, and in all colors, they promise to be, as they have been for several years, one of the universally favorite fabrics among both the smart and middle-class women.

Not only are the French and English suitings copied in mohairs, but there are also many original designs, including pekin stripes, plaids of all sorts, jacquard, and other effects. Some of the mohairs are corded, and these are even more durable than the others. Not only are the mohairs being much used this Autumn and offered for Winter, but the coming Spring will see them out in full force and in many new designs. In short, for the woman who desires to combine smartness and economy the various mohair suitings are a good investment.

In rich gowns for elaborate functions, chiffon velvets lead in the list of materials. These velvets come in all colors and in many shades and are made up into reception and evening gowns of all kinds, from a plain princess skirt and little bolero jacket calling costume to the décolleté ball gown rich in embroideries or heavy laces.

Another standard fabric for elaborate gowns is broadcloth, and the chiffon varieties are made up in exquisite afternoon and dinner gowns.

Other standard fabrics as popular as ever among New York fashionables are voile for day wear, and chiffon cloth, chiffon, and crêpes for evening frocks. Any and all of these various fabrics may be purchased for the different gowns mentioned with the comfortable assurance that they are smart as well as economical.

The brides of this month have some charming frocks in their trousseaux. One full-figured brunette has a princess robe of white chiffon cloth over pale-pink liberty satin. It is an evening gown with pointed décolletage, and the sleeves are distinctly novel. The bodice has shaped straps of the liberty satin covering the shoulder curve and shaped over the top of the arm a trifle. A section of chiffon cloth is laid on with its edges lapped in under the inner edge of the liberty satin shoulder band, and the cloth forming the sleeve then extends down in both the back and the front to within three inches of the lowest point of the décolletage, the cloth being laid in easy plaits an inch wide and overlapping each other from over the shoulder, the ends of the plaits being brought together at the edge of the band. These plaits fall loosely over the shoulder curve and partially over the top of the arm, for there are as many plaits as are necessary to achieve this result. The lower edge of the chiffon section forming each sleeve describes a semicircular fall over the top of the arm, and a four-inch ruffle of point de gaze is set on around the edge under a tiny box ruching of white liberty satin ribbon having a picot edge. These lace ruffles on the sleeves terminate an inch or so above the elbows. Each sleeve has an odd fichu effect that is wholly new.

The chiffon cloth of the bodice is laid in close plaits over the tight rose colored foundation, the plaits being in the lower half and so tacked as to have the tacking invisible but so arranged as to flare out properly over the bust. Where the lace ruffles of the fichu sleeves end, at the lower part of the pointed décolletage, in both the back and the front, a large, loose-petaled pink rose is caught.

A panel of Irish lace extends from the top of the corsage to the hem of the skirt in the back, and a similar but narrower one is placed in the front.

The back panel is six inches wide at the top and widens out to twenty inches at the bottom. The front panel is five inches wide at the top, three at the waist line, and sixteen at the bottom. From each panel folds of white liberty satin are drawn around the sides, giving a girdle effect. Below the hip line the skirt portion is so gored that it falls in full folds to the floor, and around the bottom of the robe there is a ten-inch flounce of the chiffon cloth having a border four inches deep of point de gaze and a heading of the picot-edged ribbon.

Another exquisite princess robe for another bride is of pale yellow radium silk, the silk having a shining and brilliant but soft lustre. This is an afternoon gown, and also a theatre frock if desired. It fits with glovelike smoothness, unbroken by a line of trimming about the waist and hips, and the top is also fitted smoothly over the tight lining. A bolero effect is given by the use of inch-wide knife-blade plaitings of the silk. These, three in number, start from each shoulder seam, and, curving down around the front, go under the arms, and, rising, end in the shoulder seams at the back, meeting there the other end or beginning of the plaitings.

The sleeves also show the plaitings. These sleeves are quite full at the tops, being gathered in to the shoulder seams. At the elbows they are gathered in, and finished at the edges with inch-wide knife plaitings, and inserted under these edge plaitings are removable coat-shaped under sleeves that end perhaps six inches from the hands. These, too, are finished by knife-blade plaitings, and there is also a row of the plaitings midway between the bottom of the sleeves and the elbows. Above the elbow plaitings there are three similar plaitings on each sleeve at equal distances apart, the top one being some five inches from the shoulder seams.

The top of the robe has a Dutch neck cut round and there is a removable stock and guimpe of duchesse lace.

A panel effect something like that on the princess robe described above also appears on this, but it appears in the front and is four inches wide at the top of the corsage, where it begins, to the wide band of heavy lace going around the skirt midway from waist line to hem. In the back there is also a panel, but this is made of quarter-inch tucks of the silk extending from the corsage top to the lace skirt band, and being some five inches broad. The band of heavy lace encircling the skirt is some ten inches broad and is a combination of heavy lace in white, cream, and ecru shades. Below this band of lace comes an immensely wide tuck, say, six inches deep, and between this and the four-inch hem are three one-inch tucks.

\+ + +

A very handsome black chiffon cloth gown for a young widow just out of mourning has a trailing skirt, the foundation of which is black liberty satin; this is covered with white chiffon cloth, and over this comes the frock slip of black chiffon bordered to the knees with medallions of black lace and fine tucks, the latter cut out in the shape of medallions and inserted between the lace medallions. The chiffon top is laid in accordion plaiting and the deep girdle is formed of chiffon folds going around the waist.

The black liberty foundation skirt projects three inches beyond the middle skirt of white chiffon cloth, and is finished by a six-inch knife-blade plaiting of black chiffon over which falls the flat white lace flounce attached to the middle skirt. The black lace medallions of the upper robe or jupe proper extend half their length in tab effects over the white lace flounce, and between each two large black lace medallions is a shorter, narrower one with a pointed end also extending an inch or so over the lace flounce. Between these lower rows of medallions and the upper row are medallion-shaped sections of narrow, vertical tucks of black chiffon. Black lace insertion an inch wide is used to join the medallion together and also to join the upper medallions to the skirt.

The top has a foundation of the black liberty satin as a tight lining, and over this is white chiffon cloth loosely arranged, and having white lace medallions attached to the lower edge, the medallions extending out over the top of the very deep black girdle. Over all this is a bolero jacket of black chiffon cloth laid in lengthwise tucks. This jacket is bordered with small black lace medallions, ending from an inch to two inches higher than the white ones of the middle of white chiffon cloth section. There is a deep sailor collar yoke of heavy white lace laid on over tucked black chiffon, and below this collar or yoke and above the bust are small oval black lace medallions. The white middle section rises into a stock edged with white lace, and has a tiny fold of black velvet around the top below the lace edge.

The sleeves have scant shoulder puffs of lengthwise tucked black chiffon cloth over the plain white chiffon. In the centre of each sleeve puff is a large black lace medallion. Just below the puffs a three-quarter-inch strip of black velvet ribbon is wound around the arm and ends in a tiny flat bow at the outside of each arm. Below this velvet extend half medallions of black lace over a six-inch ruffle of white lace that is drawn closely over the black liberty satin lining. Peeping from under this tight band of lace is a scant puff of black chiffon, and from under this black chiffon puff a four-inch ruffle of white lace droops over each arm.

Among new trimming materials are the radium braids, manufactured in Germany. These have a high lustre in numberless designs. There are crossbar, block and flower effects, also Grecian and Roman designs. Some have soutache effects, while others show blocks and triangles. Soutache is another braid that is extensively used, although it is the most unassuming of any of the braids.

Many of the new braids show hints of tinsel, but these are really less desirable than other styles. Fine silk cords woven into braids give a rich passementerie effect and are expensive.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1905.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

A more favorable turn in the money markets, both at home and abroad, near the close of the week, save only in the position of sterling exchange, where rates rose steadily, was the chief development in financial affairs of the week. In the President's utterances at Raleigh Wall Street took only the mildest interest, for it hae become a settled conviction that between the Executive and the fruition of his designs in the matter of railroad rate legislation the Senate stands, an insurmountable obstruction. There was, however, a modicum of gratification over the more temperate tone of the address and the frank reiteration of Mr. Roosevelt's opposition to Government ownership, although to many this seems to represent only a modest extension of the principle involved in the present rate-regulating proposal. A matter of only the most passing influence on the market wae the closing of the Enterprise National Bank of Allegheny, Penn., and the disclosures of the manner in which that institution appears to have been pillaged. In the matter of news bearing on the financial situation the present season offers a striking contrast to its predecessors in other years. This is particularly true in the case of the flotations of new corporations and of additional securities by established concerns of all kinds. Where three and four years ago each day witnessed the formation of a new company, with ambitious plans for the consolidation of many concerns under its management, and where in the two subsequent years these hastily put together corporations, railroad and industrial, were deluging the markets with stocks and bonds and notes, in an endeavor to bolster up their faultily constructed fabrics, this year there has been utter absence of such developments. The demands from the corporations formed heretofore have ceased, either because inefficiency in management has given way to orderly and profitable conduct of their affairs, and here there might be cited the cases of the United States Steel Corporation, the Crucible Steel Company, and, more recently, the Republic Steel and Iron Company, or as a result of the pure abundance of business, so great in volume that even badly handled concerns cannot fail to make money. Whatever the cause, the result has been the absence of at least one great strain hitherto imposed on capital. Only one industrial of any pretension has been organized within the last six months, and that, the street car combination, is capitalized at some $55,000,000. Fresh bond issues have been in moderate volume, the most important, that of the Pennsylvania, calling for less than $80,000,000 oc actual cash. It has been this cessation of demands on the money supply that has allowed the banks to meet the unprecedented call from commerce and industry and the farms, and at the same time to assist in the financing of Japan's wants. The surplus for speculative purposes has been small, but thus far, at least, there has been no rebellion in that quarter, a fact which should count heavily in later markets.

The betterment in the money markets came after mid-week, although the ease with which the final payments for Japanese bonds were effected on Monday imparted much confidence. The banks began to gain in their transactions with the Sub-Treasury early in the week, and at its close this profit had become so important as to play, with the imported gold, a prominent part in the ultimate increase of $1,797,200 in cash reported by the Associated Banks, whose surplus reserve now stands at $12,583,150, as compared with $10,211,400 in the previous week. Through the week there was a gradual ease in call money rates, and on Friday, when the effects of this ease were found in the upward turn in stocks, 3 per cent. was touched, and time rates also declined one-quarter of 1 per cent. In European markets the fore part of the week witnessed advances in discount rates, these being particularly sharp at London and Berlin, and in the former market there occurred a smart rise in the price of bar gold and eagles. The German Bank made a better showing in its weekly statement, and the Bank of England likewise reported an improved position, and thereafter rates in Berlin steadily fell, while a more cheerful outlook prevailed in London, where bar gold began to decline. At the week's end the markets abroad were firm and rather optimistic. The most interesting development locally hearing on the money position was the week's extreme advance in sterling exchange, which on Friday sold at 4.8675, a rise of 1 cent in the pound over the quotation of the previous week, and of over 1½ cents within two weeks. The advance is due to the covering of finance bills, and, possibly, in some degree to preparations for the remittaace of Japanese funds now on deposit here, although of this there is no certainty. The situation in regard to finance bills is both interesting and important in its bearing on the future course of exchange, and therefore on the question of further gold imports, or the possibility of gold exports. The low discount rates abroad up to September and the moral certainty that here rates would work higher as harvest time drew near led to what now appears to have been a widespread drawing of long bills, especially on London, for the purpose of putting out the proceeds at the good interest rates in prospect. The natural expectation of local bankers who participated in this movement was that when cotton and grain bills came into the market at this season their own bills could be covered easily and profitably. The volume of these finance bills was unquestionably heavy, and the funds obtained, as is well known, of course, helped to promote ease in the market up to the moment the interior demands came into play. Bills drawn early in the year were renewed once, perhaps twice, but they are now falling due and payment is desired by the foreign bankers upon whom they were drawn, since money rates abroad are at a point where profitable employment can be found at home for the funds represented by the bills. It is doubtful if this general rise in European money rates was widely foreseen, but it has come, and foreign funds are being called home. This brings the drawers of the maturing bills into the exchange market to purchase for remittance, but another expectation, that of a plentiful supply of cotton bills, has been disappointed, and the result has been the energetic bidding for the meagre supply of other bills, which has driven demand sterling steadily up to a point where gold export possibilities are now as freely discussed as were imports recently. Factors which tend to maintain rates well above import figures are the evident disposition of cotton growers to hold their product back for higher figures than spinners abroad will pay, this tending to restrict the volume of cotton bills, upon which at this season the market always counts; the probability of remittances of Japanese funds now here, and the fact that three months' bills were drawn so freely up to the September increase in English discount rates that demands from this source for covering purposes are expected to run on until close to the year's end. Another influence toward continued firmness and even exports as the ultimate development lies in the financing of the Russian loan. French demands on its London funds might result in an exchange situation where gold would leave this city on a "triangular" operation. There are, at any rate, possibilities in the exchange position which cannot be neglected in the formation of opinions on the money outlook. And on that the securities market depends.

GEORGE J. GOULD'S new offices on the fourth floor of the Western Union Building at 195 Broadway have been finished. These are the offices into which Mr. Gould was said to have taken refuge when Joseph Ramsey, Jr., reappeared in the Wabash offices after he returned from Europe. As a matter of fact Mr. Gould had been occupying some of these offices for some time previous to that event. Indeed, Mr. Gould showed little disposition to avoid Mr. Ramsey while the campaign for control of the Wabash Railroad was on. He seemed rather to enjoy the fight and to find pleasure in meeting the man who was trying to oust him.

American Stocks Abroad.

The Financial News of London, in a recent article, says that the Amsterdam market is by far the greatest on the Continent for American securities. From the Amsterdam Stock Exchange official price list it can be seen that no less than about 210 American and Canadian railway and industrial securities are dealt in there; while, moreover, there are about fifty Central and South American bonds which have a market in Amsterdam. A trustworthy private investigation compiled last year puts the face value of American railway bonds held in Holland at $284,000,000, that of American railway and industrial stocks at $261,500,000. Among these there are such important holdings as $40,000,000 United States Steel Corporation common shares, $27,000,000 Missouri, Kansas and Texas common shares, $12,000,000 Erie Railroad common shares, $12,000,000 Southern Railway common shares, $10,000,000 New York, Ontario and Western shares, $20,000,000 Atchison-Topeka 4 per cent. general mortgage bonds, $16,000,000 Chicago Northwestern bonds, $15,000,000 Mexican consols, $45,000,000 Central Pacific and Southern Pacific bonds.

OPERATING EFFICIENCY

Varied Showing of Railroads in Matter of Operating Cost.

YEAR'S RESULTS FAVORABLE

Great Northern's Net Earnings More Than Half of Gross—Northwest's Heavy Charges for Renewals and Cost of New Business.

The railroads of the country, according to the showing made in the annual reports that so far have come to hand, were able, generally speaking, to operate this past year to greater advantage than during the previous year. The great majority of roads show some reduction in the ratio between operating expenses and gross earnings, and in some cases the decrease in this ratio has been very considerable. There are exceptions, of course, like the Atchison, which suffered seriously by floods, but as a whole the showing is a very good one. The operating efficiency of a number of the more important railroads is shown in the following table:

†Exclusive of taxes.

A striking feature of this record is the great divergence in the amount of grose earnings saved for net. In the whole list there is but one road that has been operated for less than half of its gross earnings. That is Great Northern, the character of whose management is such that there can be no euspicion that this favorable showing was brought about by too meagre charges for maintenance. The Great Northern last year saved all but 49.26 per cent. of its gross earnings. This was a reduction of 2.15 per cent. in the percentago of operating cost to gross receipts, compared with the previous year. The opposite extreme is found in Miseouri, Kansas and Texas, whose cost of operation amounted to 75 per cent. of its receipts.

The explanation of the Great Northern's showing lies in the fact that the great amount of work done on that road in the way of improvements during recent years enabled it to handle its traffic to very great advantage. The road's increase in gross earnigs last year was $3,468,735, while its operating expenses increased by only $847,564. All this increase in operating cost represented increased expenditures for maintenance of way and equipment. The cost of conducting tranеportation—the actual cost of handling the road's traffic, in other worde—was smaller las year by $227,023, and this despite the fact that the road carried 3,290,660 tons more freight than it had the previous year.

The queetion of the relation between the increase in gross earnings and the increase in operating expenses is an intresting one. What the record is for the roads covered in the table given above is indicated in the following figures:

*Decrease.

These figuree show, it may be said, the cost of securing new business. The best showing from this point of view is made by the Lehigh Valley, which increases its gross earnings by $1,394,104, while its operating expenses increased only $59,400. In other worde, the all but 4.23 per cent. of its increase in gross was saved in the shape of net earnings.

In some cases it will be noticed the ratio is much higher than that governing the whole amount of the year's earnings and expenses. The experience of two of the roads, Atchieon and Erie, was that the increase in operating expenses more than offset the total increase in gross. Somewhat curiously the direct cause of this was the same in both cases, namely, losses by floods. The Atchison's loss by freehets, according to the estimate of the management of the road, was $2,000,000, and operating expenses from this one causs was increased by that amount.

Of all the high grade roade the percentage of operating expenses to gross earnings ih higbest in the case of Chicago and Northwestern. The charges made by that road against the expenditures for improvements charged by that road directly to operating expensee are unusually liberal. Thus the net cost of new rails isid last year and charged to operating expenses was $503,714, and $1,354,117 was spent for new ties. In addition to these heavy charges included in operating expenses the Chicago and Northwestern set aside $4,600,000 out of its surplus earnings to defray the coet of extraordinary improvements and extensions. The Great Northern's charge against surplus for improvements was $3,000,000.

ERIE CONVERTIBLES.

Recent Issue Recalls Their Use in Battles of Drew, Vanderbilt, Gould, and Jacob Little.

The Erie Railroad's issue of $12,000,000 convertible bonds, the right to subscribe to which expired last week, has recalled to the older generation of Wall Street men the remarkable uses to which former issues of Erie convertibles were put by Daniel Drew and Jacob Little in the days when these men were the financial giants of Wall Street. The Erie wee one of the first, and perhaps tbe very first, railroad of the country to issue bonds convertible into stock.

The first instance of their use in speculative ventures wae in the late fifties, when Jacob Little had started a market campaign by selling enormous quantities of options on Erie stock. The bulls quietly bought these up, and having secured control of the floating etock prepared to corner Little by bidding the stock up and holding it for tbe day when he must deliver the stock he owed on the options. On that day at 12 o'clock everybody was notified that the stock would be delivered, and a few minutes later Mr. Little marched in with fresh certificates of Erie Railroad stock. The bulls were overwhelmed, the market fell 20 points, and Mr. Little had won the day. He had found that the Erie had issued certificates convertible into stock, and having bought up these certificates he turned them in to the railroad, got the stock, snd delivered it on tbe options.

A few years later Daniel Drew and Commodore Vanderbilt fell foul of each other over the control of Erie. Vanderbilt secured an apparent corner in the stock, but knowing the use Drew had made on another occasion of convertibles he secured an injunction restraining the issue of further etocks then held for certain bonds. Drew's Executive Committee authorized an issue of $5,000,000 bonds for improvements, but as the stock into which these were convertible was in the hands of the Secretary, who had been enjoined from issuing it, the problem was to get the shares. The Secretary sent the shares by messenger to the transfer office on Pine Street, but the messenger had hardly started when he returned and said that Jim Fisk, who had been standing at the door, had taken the stock from him and ran away with it. The next day the stock wae thrown on the market and the corner effectively broken.

But Vanderbilt applied to the courts, and Drew, Fisk, and the others of the clique were compelled to cross the river to Jersey City. Uncle Daniel carrying with him the spoils, some $7,000,000, in a big carpetbag. Jay Gould, as a result of his part in the episode, wae arreeted for contempt of court, but Drew made bis peace with the Commodore.

AMERICAN FINANCE.

Are European Investors Scared?

Whether recent scandale have unsettled European opinions of American finance and scared investors is a question which is just now agitating business circles in the United States.

Prominent Americans landing in New York are, says our New York correspondent, bringing back disquieting accounts about their country's financial reputation in Europe. Mr. Hamilton W. Mabie, a prominent figure in New York social and literary circles, says it may be years before confidence is restored abroad in American financial institutions, and that "doubts are being cast, quite unjustly, by non-discriminating foreigners who read nothing but garbled accounts of strange financial jugglings."

Bishop David H. Greer has just delivered a startling address to the convention of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York, in which he declared that the colossal proportions which "grafting" has now reached among rich and prominent Americans is a menace to the country. The Bishop spoke of "a growing disrespect not only among the illiterate classes, but among the educated, for order and law, with increasing tendencies toward corruption, graft, and fraud, and the cheapening of human life, with various crimes."

Bishop Greer also pointed out that the 22,000 men killed during the three years of the Boer war were more than equaled by homicides in America during the same period. The number of murders in the United States during those three years was 31,000.

DR. BUTLER'S VIEWS.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, hae dryly declined to be a Director of the Equitable Life Assurance Society—"with every desire to help in restoring confidence to tens of thousands of policy holders."

In a public epeech Dr. Butler says the integrity of the country is menaced and "reputations are melting like snow before the sun of publicity."

"Right and wrong," Dr. Butler concluded, "have given way to the subtler distinction between honest, law-honest, and dishonest."

Inquiries in London yesterday by a Daily Mail representative hardly bear out the reported lack of confidence in America's financial probity. A few months ago it was undoubtedly true that some distrust was caused by the statements made in the investigations into the management of two of the chief insurance companies of the United States—the Equitable and the New York Life. Many people then went so far as to take up the surrender value of their policiee effected with American companies.

Leading firms in the city whose chief transactions are in American eecurities state that the period of distrust was both short and slight in its effects.

At Messrs. Speyer Brothers', for instance, it was stated yesterday that there might have been eome distruet when the attacks on the insurance companies were first made, but that soon paseed off, and does not exist at all now.—London Mail.

DEALING IN NAMES

An Active Demand for Fresh and Productive Lists.

VENDING THEM A BUSINESS

Why Access to the Transfer Books of Large Corporations Is Sometimes Sought.

The holder of two shares of the stock of a well-known corporation succeeded a few days ago in obtaining a writ of mandamus giving him the right to inspect the company's books for the purpose of taking a list of the stockholders. All large corporations make it a point to oppose an application for this privilege, owing to the experience that in a majority of instances it is likely to be abused.

The business of merchandizing in names plays an important part in the machinery of Wall Street. There is always a ready market for a list of good names. The value of a list is determined not only by its length, but by various qualities adapting it to the uses for which it is offered. An exclusive list is much more valuable than one which is in general circulation. A list that would be valuable to a speculative house might be of little or no value to a house desiring to enlarge its audience among investors. A strong list of investors' names is a more valusble asset than any outsider could believe. There are only a few such lists on the market, and they could not be bought, or even seen, except by prospective purchasers of the highest integrity and reputation. They are kept in safety deposit vaults, and are jealously guarded. A new banking house, on beginning business, would have to procure such a list to start with. In the course of a few years' business it would develop a list of its own, and have then an exclusive asset.

The market for investors' names is somewhat limited. The merchandising is chiefly in speculative names, and for such lists there is always an active market. Lists of doubtful value are being constantly hawked through Wall Street, and unless the buyer is wide awake he is likely to buy a lot of "stale" names which have been worked over and over and are unproductive. A fresh and unworked list of speculative names is something that does not need to be hawked. The vendor does not have to go far with his goode if he offers tho list in the right way.

It does not necessarily detract from the value of a list of speculative namee that the persons on it have been unfortunate in their last speculations. After the collapse of one of the most notorious swindlee that wae ever perpetrated in Wall Street a shrewd dealer in names placed a few advertisements calling upon thoee who had been swindled to send him their names and addresses. The impreesion he conveyed wae that eteps would be taken to recover some of the money that had been lost. All that the advertieer wanted was the names. He got thousands of replies, from which he made up a list of names which he sold at once in Wall Street for $5,000. Then he went to Chicago and sold the same liet there for a like sum. He sold it once or twice more and netted about $15,000 on the venture. The buyers of this list were under no illusions concerning its origin. The value of the list to them lay in the fact that it put them in touch with thousands of the most credulous persons in tbe country

Promoters of mining stock schemes and bucket shop operatore are large buyers of new names. The failure of a big bucket shop invariably leaves in the hands of some employe a list of names on which he is able to realize a few thousand dollars very quickly. There have been some lists in circulation among promoters so complete as to show opposite each name the various schemes in which the prospective dupe had already lost money, the particular kind of speculation that had always appealed to him, the probable extent to which he could be interested in a new venture, otherwise his resources, and other detaile bearing upon his credulity.

Somebody owning one or two shares of stock is constantly trying to gain access to the transfer booke of large corporations for the purpose of getting names. If the privilege were indiscriminately granted, the compiling of such lists would become a regular business with vendore of namee. Large corporations feel that they owe it to their stockholders to protect them from the endless solicitation that would follow the placing of their names in the hands of Wall Street promoters and swindlers. A list of the United States Steel Corporation's stockholders would be a pretty prize for a dealer in names, and if the holder of two shares of United States Steel common could establish a legal right to copy the list from the transfer books he would gladly enough pay $75 for the necessary stock and clerical fees for the transcription. In oppoeing those who would in thie way possess themselves of valuable lists of names the corporations expose themselves to the suspicion that they are trying to hide something, whereas, in most caees, it is only because they distrust the motive behind the application that they seek to withhold the privilege.

STANDARD OIL STOCK.

Not All Held as Popularly Supposed by a Few Men—List Contains 4,000 Names.

The stock of the Standard Oil Company which popularly is believed to be lodged in the hands of a very few men is as a matter of fact held by a great many individuals. The interest in the company of the Rockefellers, of H. H. Rogers, and of the other men whose names are intimately connected with the Standard Oil Company are naturally very large, and among them they actually hold a controlling interest, but they by no means own all the stock. When the hooks were closed for the dividend which was paid on Sept. 15 the list of stockholders contained between 4,000 and 4,100 names. Large blocks of the stock are held by capitalists in no way directly associated with the company. Scarcely a day passes that some estate does not present Standard Oil stock for transfer to individual heirs.

These facts in regard to the distribution of Standard Oil stock are given on authority. Probably few people in Wall Street or out of it have any idea that the list of stockholders of the company contains more than a few hundred names at most. In many cases the stock has been held for years, and when bequeathed has been held by the heirs instead of being disposed of in the market.

German Trade.

Consul General Guenther of Frankfort reports that Germany's total imports in 1904 amounted to $1,633,703,400, and total exports to $1,265,065,200. The United States furnished 13.8 per cent. of the imports and took 9.3 per cent. of the exports.

HIGH SALARIES.

Curious Results Reached by Application of Mr. McCurdy's Theory.

The attempt of President McCurdy of the Mutual Life Insurance Company at a recent session of the Insurance Investigating Committee to justify his high salary by the amount of the Mutual's assets, of which he is the official guardian, raised an interesting question: Ought salaries of corporation officials to be governed by the amount of the company's assets or by the work performed by the official?

In connection with Mr. McCurdy's contention the statement was made by his counsel that the Mutual's assets were greater than those of the three great banks of Europe combined. This misstatement was later corrected, but it gave an opportunity to Mr. Hughes to set forth the salaries of the chief executive officers of two of those institutions. The salary of the Director of the Bank of England, it was pointed out, was $10,000 a year, and that of the President of the Imperial German Bank 30,000 marks, or $7,500. These salaries, in juxtaposition to Mr. McCurdy's $150,000, seem very small indeed.

The salaries of the Presidents of other important institutions and corporations vary greatly, of course, though few, if any, equal that of the President of the Mutual Life. The Presidents of even the largest banks, so far as is known, receive but a fraction of that salary, and industrial companies, the assets of which exceed those of the Mutuel, pay much less to their Presidents than the amount considered by Mr. McCurdy as a fair compensation for his work in behalf of the Mutual.

The Standard Oil Company, the giant among the trusts, pays relatively modest salaries to its officers and trustees. Mr. John D. Rockefeller as President of the company and Chairman of the Executive Committee, receives a salary of $30,000 a year and the other trustees receive $25,000 each. The salary of tho President of the United States Steel Corporation is said to be $75,000 a year. The assets of both the Steel Corporation and of the Standard Oil Company, the latter as indicated by the price of its stock, are considerably larger than the $440,000,000 assets of the Mutual Life.

If this principle of proportioning salaries to assets were put into universal effect some very curious results would be reached. What under those conditions would be the salary of the President of the United States, who has to safeguard National riches which are but vaguely indicated by figuree running into the billions. On the basis of the money in circulation, which represents but a relatively small part of the country's total wealth, the President's salary, if Mr. McCurdy's theory were applied, would be fixed somewhere in excese of $750,000 a year.

Applying this theory to the assets of a number of corporations the following results are shown:

	Assets.	President's Salary.	Salary Under Asset Theory.
Mutual Life.....	$440,970,000	$150,000	$150,000

"AMERICAN LACING."

A Curious Stock Whose Vagaries Interested the Curb Market.

How a "company" with no plant, and no capital with which to build one, can have its shares traded in on the Broad Street curb has been demonstrated in an illuminating fashion by the course of the "American Lacing Company." On Sept. 19 the recorded price of the stock was 22½—a few days ago a broker sold 100 sharee of it for $1. The par value is supposed to be $25. There have been somewhat similar occurrences on the curb, many of them, but the peculiarly opera bouffe character of this enterprise in shoe eyelets makes it stand alone.

Arturo Fonts, a Spanish importer with an office in the Bowling Green Building, invented an eyelet intended to replace the hooks now in common use to carry shoe laces. He was confident the eyelet would "take" with the public—but, according to the story told by his nephew-partner the other day, he needed money to furnish a plant. So far all the eyelets have been made by hand. The inventor at this stage of the game procured the advice of a promoter.

So "American Lacing" was sold on the curb. From time to time the daily record of curb tranefers would inention a eale of the stock at around 22. The real character of theee eo-called "sales" can best be judged by the fact that three or four curb brokers, when asked about "American Lacing" a day or two ago, actually did not know whether "22" had meant 22 cents or 22 dollars. Finally a broker—it happened to be Burrell—wanted to really sell some shares, and $1 was all he could get for 100.

The little leaflet describing the "American Lacing Company" gives the capital as $500,000, "fully paid and non-assessable," and the par value of each share as $25. After the leaflet was issued in good form a market was "made" for "American Lacing." One broker would offer it at 22 or 23 and another would grab it up—but the wise ones were not fooled. The news of the sale of 100 shares for $1 stirred up only a mild curiosity among the curb brokers. When one inquirer, a little more curious than the rest, went to 11 Broadway he found a door bearing the words "American Lacing Company" and on the other side of the door was F. Fonts, the inventor's nephew.

Naively he showed a sample yellow shoe, fitted with the "Fonts eyelets," and said: "These eyelets were made by hand—we haven't any plant yet." The plant, he further explained, was to be built as soon as enough money was realized from the sale of shares.

LAST WEEK AND A YEAR AGO.

Trading Very Light, Compared with Corresponding Period in 1904.

Transactions on the Stock Exchange on Monday last were the smallest recorded for a full day in several months. The relative dullnese of the market was a matter of special note this past week for the reason that during the corresponding week a year ago the dealings were on a very heavy scale. The comparison of the two weeks by days is as follows:

	Week Ended Oct. 21, 1905.	Week Ended Oct. 22, 1904.
Monday	373,807	1,840,086
Tuesday	543,916	1,505,042
Wednesday	696,241	1,741,558
Thursday	727,208	1,994,935
Friday	930,627	1,889,640
Saturday	649,692	962,694
Total	3,821,561	9,334,855

It is true, notwithstanding this showing, that the total dealings this year are far in excess of those of last year. The heaviest trading in 1904 was during the last three months, in fact, during the last quarter the transactions equaled the trading for the previous nine months. This is the showing for 1904:

	Stocks, Shares.	Bonds, Par Value.
October	32,479,568	$149,973,500
November	31,960,929	216,853,500
December	28,175,450	118,153,000
Total, 3 months...	92,615,947	$484,980,000
Previous 9 months....	93,918,487	551,830,560
Total for year.....	186,529,434	$1,036,810,560
First 9 months of 1905.	187,004,226	793,166,200

Up to Oct. 1 this year the dealings exceeded by about 1,500,000 shares those of the full year 1904. Should the business on the Exchange be as active for the balance of the year as it was last year the total transactions for 1905 would amount to 375,000,000 shares.

NATIONS AS INVESTORS

American Capital Abroad Relatively Unimportant.

EUROPE'S VAST INCOME

Hundreds of Millions of Dollars Received Annually by Britain, Germany, and France from Investments Abroad—Statistics.

The recent investments of American capital in the Japanese loans, and the prospect of further investments, although on a less liberal scale, in Russian securities, has directed attention to the relatively small amounts of American capital invested in foreign securities or in enterprises in other countries than our own. Foreign securities listed on the Stock Exchange, for instance, total about $1,500,000,000, and of this amount $1,150,000,000 comprises Russian Government bonds which have never been traded in. On the Paris Bourse there were listed in 1902 some $15,200,000,000, a figure largely augmented since that date.

Information on the question of the foreign investments of various countries has recently been afforded by the estimates made by the Almanach Hachette of Paris, covering such investments of French capital, and by a similar compilation concerning Germany's investments made by Prof. Paul Arndt of Frankfort-on-Main for Edgar Speyer of the London banking house of Speyer Bros. and published in The Statist. These estimates do not pretend to absolute accuracy, a thing impossible in dealing with the matter of foreign investments, but they present a graphic illustration of the worldwide financial interests of the two countries.

The table of German capital investments abroad given below regards only the funds invested in trade and commerce, and in industry and agriculture in the countries named, the moneye invested in foreign securities being estimated separately:

Countries.	German Capital.	Countries.	German Capital.
Russia, Sweden, Norway, Holland, Belgium, Switz'l'd, Italy, Austria, Oth. Eur.	$1,875,000,000	Cent. Am..	$300,000,000
		So. America	500,000,000
		Egypt, Asia ..	84,000,000
		Other Asia & India	62,500,000
		Turkey	100,000,000
		Brit. Africa..	225,000,000
		Other Africa..	25,000,000
		Australia, &c.	150,000,000
United States	500,000,000

In addition to this total the investments in foreign securities proper are estimated at another $3,800,000,000, making the total investments of German capital in foreign enterprises some $7,500,000,000. Prof. Arndt calculates that the German people receive from this investment abroad about $375,000,000 a year as income. He makes the further estimate that each year Germany's capital investment abroad amounte to some $200,000,000.

The estimate of the Almanach Hachette of French capital invested abroad is not so satisfactory as the German calculation, for no distinction is made explicitly between investments in securities and those in trade and commerce of various kinds. The table, however, follows:

Countries.	French Capital.	Countries.	French Capital.
Russia	$1,393,000,000	United States.	120,000,000
Spain	595,000,000	Tunis	100,000,000
Austria	570,000,000	Mexico	60,000,000
Turkey	430,000,000	Canada	28,000,000
Brit. Africa.	318,000,000	Germany	11,000,000
Egypt	287,000,000	Portugal	180,000,000
Italy	287,000,000	Belgium	120,000,000
England	200,000,000	Switzerland	81,000,000
Brazil	140,000,000	Roumania	87,000,000
China	130,000,000	Scandinavia	65,000,000

To these figures must he added some $600,000,000 invested by France in her colonies, and it would seem that further additions must be made to the Russian total, which is in fact conservatively placed at $2,400,000,000 at the present time. Also the total as regards the United States would seem to need revision, and as a whole it seems improbable that French investments in foreign securities and enterprises are less than Germany's.

Prof. Arndt quotes estimates of British capital investments abroad as showing some $15,000,000,000 thus placed by the English people.

These are huge totals for the three great creditor countries of Europe, and by them American investments pale into insignificance. Yet we have made a beginning at least. The Japanese loan took $180,000,000, a great deal of which, however, has been regained through subsequent sales of the bonds abroad; the Cuban loan called for $35,000,000, the Mexican loan for $40,000,000, and the Underground Electric Railroad of London $16,500,000. These are the principal investments in securities outside of the foreign Government and other bonds taken by life insurance companies in order to conform to the laws of foreign countries, where they wished to establish branches. In foreign enterprises, such as industrial plants and banks, it is difficult to arrive at even approximate figures. It is known, however, that such investments have been considerable, including as they have the English works of the Westinghouse and General Electric Companies and the Pneumatic Tool Company, the Russian plant, near Moscow, of the New York Air Brake Company; the Brazil properties of the United States Rubber Company, the Canadian plant of the American Locomotive Company, and the Consolidated Lake Superior Company, and the large sums of money invested in Canadian copper mines and Mexican copper, gold, and silver, and railroad properties. A complete list of industrial and mining investments outside of the United States would yield a respectable total, and there would still be the American capital in mercantile houses the world over, and in banking houses. Much American capital is abont to be or has already been invested in French-American banking institutions, including the company recently formed by Speyer & Co. and the proposed Franco-American Bank.

The importance of these investments abroad, as Prof

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Rise Still Further—A Favorable Bank Statement.

Market Advances on Exceptional Volume of Transactions, Closing Strong.

The feeling of relief engendered by the easier money position was the controlling factor again in yesterday's short session of the Stock Exchange, and prices rose steadily from the opening to the close of the market under an exceptionally large volume of trading. The advances were comparable to those on Friday, running from 1 to 3 points in the active issues, with the extreme gains found in the high-priced stocks. The securities of the manufacturers of electric apparatus were conspicuous in the movement, although one of the reports offered in explanation of General Electric's rise, that it had secured control of the Allis-Chalmers Company, was emphatically denied. Brooklyn Rapid Transit, New York Central, Delaware and Hudson, Union Pacific, and Southern Pacific scored substantial gains, while Pennsylvania and the United States Steel stocks netted increases of not more than a half point in each instance. The common shares of the American Locomotive Company and of the American Car and Foundry Company, which have been leaders in recent markets, closed with small net losses for the day. Outside of the influence derived from the expectation of a good bank statement there were no developments in any way connected with the market demonstration, and again there was reported no marked increase in outside business.

Less than half the minimum gain in cash revealed by compilations of the known movements of currency was actually reported as secured by the banks, the bank statement returning the cash gain as only $1,797,200. To offset this unexpected difference, however, there was reported a decrease of $3,594,200 in loans, where an increase had been looked upon as entirely probable. The deposit account decreased $2,298,200, the showing in respect to both this item and that affecting loans presenting sufficient contrast to the great changes which the bank returns for weeks past have disclosed in these accounts. The result of the changes was an increase of $2,371,750 in surplus reserves, which now stand at $12,583,150, comparing with $17,853,925 in 1904, $17,944,450 in 1903, and $17,781,475 in 1902, when the course of surplus most nearly resembled its changes in the present season. The present position of reserves is such that contingencies like the withdrawal of funds for New Orleans, further demands by the West, and an exchange rate prohibiting gold imports, if not indicating gold exports, may be faced without hesitation provided these funds are not allowed to become locked up in speculative ventures.

ON THE LONDON EXCHANGE

Stock Markets Dominated by the Uncertain Money Outlook.

Other Influences Favorable, But Not Powerful Enough to Boom Business In Face of the Dread of Dearer Money—Foreigns Dull.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1905.]

LONDON, Oct. 21.—The stock markets continue to be dominated by the uncertainty of the monetary outlook. There was no change in the bank rate this week, but a good deal of doubt prevails as to whether the Bank of England will pass through the closing months of the year without advancing its minimum to 5 per cent.

Influences favorable to higher prices prevail in a number of departments of the market, but they are counteracted by the dread of dearer money. They seem to keep stocks from falling appreciably, but are not powerful enough to boom business in the face of the adverse monetary situation.

British railways, for example, would undoubtedly be in heavy demand and at much better figures but for the fear of a squeeze in the money market. They are well maintained, but are not rising in price to any great extent.

British Government stocks are in a similar situation, though consols rallied a trifle toward the end of the week on the strength of a slight addition to the Bank's stock of gold, and they close a slight fraction above last week's figures.

Foreign stocks have been dull, chiefly on account of the pending Russian loan and the rather weak tone of the Paris Bourse. Paris is said to be suffering still from the effects of the Cronier collapse.

The American market has been distinctly professional all the week, with prices moving up and down from day to day. There has been an almost general loss of market value.

There have been one or two little flurries in the Kaffir Circus, but the market as a whole continues in a state of depression.

LONDON STOCK MARKET.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—Rates for money were easier in the market to-day, and supplies were fairly abundant. Discounts were steady. The $5,000,000 in gold shipped from India for the account of the Indian Secretary was landed in Egypt and a corresponding sum was set aside by the Bank of England for the Indian currency note reserve.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was cheerful. Prices hardened with the cessation of liquidation, although there was the usual week-end slackness, in addition to which the nearness of the settlement checked dealings. Consols were steady, sustaining first-class securities. Home rails were strong.

Americans opened steady, improved on New York support, and hopes of a good New York bank statement, and closed firm and inactive.

Japanese Imperial 6s of 1904 were quoted at 101⅞.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England to-day was £29,000. The sum of £20,000 was withdrawn for shipment to Egypt.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 28.05; Lisbon, 5.50.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

In yesterday's short stock market session the bull element, by resuming operations where it had left off on Friday and by pressing its advantage aggressively, right up to the closing, plainly advertised its determination to swing the movement over the end of the week, if possible. With such headway as the market has already gained under the present leadership it may be feasible enough to continue the demonstration on Monday. If the attempt is made it should have the value at least of showing the extent to which the public is willing to support a bull campaign especially designed to meet its preferences for low-priced stocks. When the market gathers strength and activity toward the last of the week and closes on Saturday showing strength and buoyancy, a certain response from outside sources is expected on the following Monday. On the inducements held out in the market in the last two or three days there should be an accumulation of buying orders against the opening on Monday if the public is in an attentive mood. If there is no such response it will doubtless be very disappointing to those now operating on the bull side.

There was some increase of commission business toward the end of the week, as naturally there would be, but general interest did not broaden in proportion to the enlargement of professional activity. The advance was engineered largely by professional operators and was supported by professional traders.

***

The active leadership in the market in the last fortnight has not been of a character to inspire the utmost confidence. It has been the leadership of men like Jacob Field, John W. Gates, James R. Keene, and one or two other large operators not so well known, all striving to advance prices. It is believed that Keene and Field have been working more or ' s together. The movement began in specialties and low-priced industrials, and in these the bull crowd found the lines of least resistance. In the high-priced stocks further headway had become temporarily impossible, owing partly to the amount of money it took to bull them, partly to inside opposition, and partly to the indifference of the commission house public. Experienced operators, out of sympathy with efforts to carry the market any further in the high-priced issues, began to say weeks ago that the bull party's only alternative would be to turn the tide of speculation into low-priced stocks. That has been done, or at least it has been attempted; the ultimate success of the movement will depend largely upon the public's attitude toward it.

***

The activity in yesterday's session was rather unevenly distributed. Two of the industrial stocks which had occupied a great deal of attention in Friday's trading, namely, American Locomotive and American Car and Foundry, went stale, both showing an abrupt falling off in activity, and both closing at fractional declines. The movement in American Woolen continued, that stock scoring a further advance of 1½ per cent. Brooklyn Rapid Transit made a further sensational advance, touching 78¾. It was the most conspicuous feature of the market. Union Pacific was equally active, but advanced less; anyway, Union Pacific is normally much the more active stock of the two. In the last hour the market took on an appearance of greater general strength from the marked activity and pronounced buoyancy in such stocks as Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, New York Central, and several of the higher-priced issues like Delaware and Hudson. Instead of trying to take profits on the bank statement, the bull crowd only increased its exertions after publication of the week's banking results. It closed the market at practically the highest prices of the week.

Professional operations on the bull side of the market were greatly favored last week by the easier condition of the call money market. The last payment on the Japanese loan, amounting to $20,000,000, was made on Monday, and as a large part of this money was loaned out on call, the bull crowd had the use of it at an average rate of about 4¾ per cent. It was the accessibility of this money to speculators, perhaps more than any other one thing, that stimulated professional activity. The short interest in the market was found to be much larger and more vulnerable than the average observer had supposed. This was a special incentive for bullish operations of a professional character.

***

A large bear interest in the general list was eliminated during the week. Bears who had been fighting the market for a month yielded to the pressure and covered on Friday and Saturday. The bear position was not seriously attacked until Friday. Previously, the activity and strength had been largely in specialties and industrials, and operations in that quarter of the market did not lead to any general covering of short contracts, for the short interest was chiefly in another class of stocks, as, for example, in Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, upon which speculative interest had formerly converged. On Friday the bull element began a general demonstration in these oversold stocks and hid them up easily at the expense of the short interest. A lot of short selling followed the bear attack launched from Boston on Thursday, and it turned out very badly. The Boston attack was abortive. It caused a bad half hour at the opening on Thursday morning, and that was all. None of the short stock put out in that half hour was taken back at a profit.

***

Hayden, Stone & Co. of Boston, who began to bull "coppers" several weeks ago, say: "Our experience indicates that more coppers are going away from the Stock Exchange than are being brought to it all the time. While the present metal conditions continue the stock situation in our judgment is likely to grow stronger and stronger, and can only be fundamentally weakened by the flotation of a large number of new properties. This is a phase of the market of which there is no sign at present."

***

It seems impossible that a bull campaign in the industrial quarter of the market should succeed without the United States Steel shares being in the van of the movement. The prominence last week of industrial stocks in which the public's interest is extremely limited contrasted rather unfavorably with the backwardness of the United States Steel shares. Steel common sold at 39 on Oct. 3; since then it has sold at 37. Its highest point last week was 38¾, touched on Saturday. The stock's chief claim to distinction last week was the manner in which it was supported at 37 under heavy selling. It rallied 1¾ per cent. from that price, but it was not nearly so prominent in the week's industrial share speculation as it should have been. Several other industrials made new high records for the year. It is the opinion of shrewd observers that a campaign in industrial stocks cannot be continued in a broad and successful manner unless Steel common is turned more positively to the bull side of the market.

***

One criticism of the market's bull leadership last week was that it was confined so largely to stocks which people do not hold. It is easy to advance prices where you are sure of not having to take a great deal of stock.

One result of the great strength and activity of Brooklyn Rapid Transit is to make a better market for the convertible 4 per cent. bonds. They are selling now above 96. The Nassau 4s, which are guaranteed, principal and interest, by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, have not advanced any on the deal rumors that have been employed to bull the stock and the convertible bonds. Mr. Keene is supposed to be active again in Brooklyn Rapid Transit stock. He has been bulling it off and on for a good while. The advance has attracted a large professional following, led by Jacob Field. The participation of the Flower crowd in this particular movement has not been very aggressive.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 21.—United Railways free incomes, which for some time have been inactive, came to the fore to-day, and, with Western Maryland common, almost monopolized trading. Toward the close the market became more active, United Railways making a net gain of ½ and Western Maryland declining ⅝ below the best point of the day, and closing at a net loss of ⅜.

Cotton Duck 5s advanced ⅛ to 82⅛. Seaboard new trust preferred opened with an advance of ¼, then rose to 90½. Northern Central regained some of its recent loss, selling up ¾. United States Fidelity, which sold off yesterday to 122, rose to 128. Alabama Coal and Iron common gained 2½ points. The close was dull and steady.

BANK STATEMENT.

Cash Increases and Loans Fall Off—Increase in Surplus.

The gain in cash shown in yesterday's bank statement was smaller than was estimated on Friday, but on the other hand there was a reduction instead of an increase in loans as well as in deposits. The effect upon the surplus reserve was an increase of $2,371,750.

The surprise contained in the statement was the decrease in loans. It had been argued that the paying off of foreign loans, which was one of the causes of last week's high rate of exchange, would naturally increase the loans of local institutions. It was thought also that the payment of the final installment on the Japanese loan would necessitate considerable fresh borrowing. Neither of these calculations proved correct, so far at least as the net results upon the bank statement were concerned.

The surplus reserve is now $12,583,150, compared with $17,853,925 a year ago.

The items of last week's bank statement, the changes from the preceding week, and the statement of Oct. 22, 1904, follow:

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 21.—There was a firm but quiet local market, without much activity in anything except the arbitrage dealings in Reading and United States Steel. General gains, however, were the rule at the close, with speculative sentiment decidedly cheerful.

The total profit and loss surplus on June 30 last was $1,509,917.

THE COMMERCIAL WORLD

WHEAT.—Activity among December shorts in New York was a feature of the wheat market yesterday. They were disturbed by the freight situation and ran prices up ⅝c a bushel during the session, against about ⅛@¼c advance at Chicago, although the latter market subsequently went ⅛c over the previous night. At 1 o'clock the local market was still very firm, with December 82½c bid and May 91c. Outside of this sharp rise in December, the market was not particularly interesting either in point of fluctuation or as to news. Foreign markets were higher, with world's shipments expected to be around 9,000,000 bushels. There was an export business of ten loads reported and the West predicted a better cash demand on milling account. The close at Liverpool was partly ⅛d net higher. At Paris there was a 5-point advance, Berlin ⅛@1¼ marks, and at Budapest 11 points' rise. Northwest receipts amounted to 773 cars, compared with 685 cars last year, but at other points were smaller, so that the total interior movement fell about 200,000 bushels under last year's figures. Commission houses were buyers of December in New York, and the leading bull was a buyer of both December and May at Chicago. Cash prices in New York closed as follows: No. 2 red, 92c, elevator, and 93½c, free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 95½c, and No. 1 Northern, Manitoba, 94⅝c, free on board, afloat.

CORN.—During the regular session corn was inactive in all markets and no more than steady, but after the regular close here a strong feeling developed and prices at the West advanced sharply, closing at highest levels of the day. At 1 o'clock December, in New York, was 54⅝c; January, 52⅛c, and May, 50⅜c. The cables were a little firmer and receipts about the same as last year. In cash circles five loads were taken for export. No. 2 corn was quoted 61c, elevator, and 61½c, free on board, afloat; No. 2 white, 62c, and No. 2 yellow, 62c, free on board, afloat.

COTTON.—There was a good deal of realizing for over the week-end, and the absence of a greater number of frost reports attracted some selling for short account, but the market met pretty active support at the decline and showed marked resistance to pressure. The close was 5 or 6 points up from the lowest, and steady at a net decline of 6@11 points, which could be considered nothing more than a natural reaction in view of the sharp advance earlier in the week.

The opening was easy at a decline of 4@7 points in response to disappointing cables and the failure of all the frost predictions of Friday to materialize in the way of killing temperatures. The weather map showed a very low average of temperatures pretty generally through the South. Oklahoma and Fort Smith reported 34 degrees, and several points had as low as 40 degrees early this morning, but it seemed that only in a few scattering instances were temperatures down to the real freezing point. The early map also indicated clear and warmer weather behind the cold wave, and while a number of private wires were received claiming damage by frost, the market gradually worked off under very heavy realizing until it reached a net decline of 13@16 points, the near months being relatively easy. Later there was a big demand from the South, based on the forecast for colder weather in the northern part of the Eastern belt on Saturday night, and the market recovered part of the loss.

Contract prices ranged as follows:

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 21.—Spot cotton—Moderate demand; sales, 7,000 bales; speculation and export, 500 bales; American, 6,000 bales; receipts, 8,000 bales, all American; middling upland, 5.54d. Futures opened steady, 1 point higher on near and 2 points higher on distant months; closed quiet, net unchanged. COFFEE.—The coffee market showed continued steadiness. The opening was steady at unchanged prices, and the market closed steady, net unchanged to 10 points higher. There seemed less uneasiness over the December situation. Certainly there was less outright liquidation, and the market slowly improved on a fair demand for the accounts of various trade interests and shorts. Estimates were circulating to the effect that the long interest in December had been greatly reduced and would probably not exceed 750,000 bags. The opening was about in line with the French market, which was net unchanged following the sharp advance of yesterday. Hamburg was unchanged to ¼ pfennig higher, and a favorable feature was considered the sharp recovery in the rate of Brazilian exchange, which was advanced 11-32d to 16 1-32d. Receipts at the two ports were 58,000 bags, against 50,000 last year, and the Jundiahy movement was 40,000 bags, against 38,000 last year. Warehouse deliveries continue liberal as compared with last year, and reached 22,622 bags on Friday, against 12,792 last year. Early in the month warehouse deliveries ran very light, and it is said that the recent improvement comes too late to materially help the showing of the world's visible supply statement as of Nov. 1.

The market for spot coffee was steady, with quotations on the basis of 8 9-16c for Rio No. 7.

Cotton Damask Napkins Assessed at 45 Per Cent.—Other Decisions.

In a decision by Marion De Vries, the Board of United States General Appraisers overruled yesterday a protest filed by F. Rosenstein & Co. of New York regarding the rate of duty applicable to cotton damask napkins. Collector Stranahan assessed the merchandise at 45 per cent. ad valorem, but the goods were claimed by the importers to be dutiable under the provision of the tariff for countable cotton cloth. The board finds that the correct classification would call for a duty of 40 per cent., but as the importer failed to make the proper claim, the protest is overruled. According to General Appraiser De Vries, the Collector erred in levying a 45 per cent. duty on the merchandise.

Other importers' claims overruled were filed by Lamb, Finlay & Co., Samuel Schiff & Co., Sullivan, Drew & Co., Thomas Prosser & Son, Veit, Son & Co., Sylvester Bros. & Co., Julius Kayser & Co., Dieckerhoff, Raffloer & Co., C. Protests partially sustained were filed by George Borgfeldt & Co., R. U. Delapenha & Co., American News Company, Samuel Schiff & Co., A. & H. Veith, and James F. White, New York.

SAVOY HOTEL

LONDON.

In May, 1904, the extensions and improvements to the Savoy Hotel were completed.

Never in the history of hotel life in any country has the appreciation of the public of the comfort and luxury provided for them been shown in a more substantial form. The best travellers from the Continent of Europe and America have pronounced the magnificent suites of rooms with bathrooms to be unrivalled—and their recommendation to friends has resulted in the large increase in business of 1904 over 1903 being greatly exceeded in the present year—thus showing that the more the public become familiar with the comforts and luxury of the hotel the greater is its popularity. The following figures show the increase in business during the London season:

MONTH.	Increase of Receipts of Hotel and Restaurant in 1904 over 1903.	Increase of Receipts of Hotel and Restaurant in 1905 over 1903.	Occupants of Apartments during month.
			1903.	1904.	1905.
MAY..........	35 per cent.	69 per cent.	4,428	4,478	8,074
JUNE..........	49 " "	85 " "	4,695	6,033	10,131
JULY..........	50 " "	108 " "	2,779	5,921	9,681

18,807 more visitors patronized the Savoy Restaurant in May, June and July, 1905, than in the same months of 1903—and during the season space alone has prevented the entertainment of a greater number of guests who have desired to enjoy the finest cuisine in the world.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

The volume of business continues to increase, and its strongest feature is still its great diversity. It is almost impossible to point to a particular neighborhood, or even to two or three neighborhoods, as centres of activity, or to mention any particular class of trading which seems to monopolize the attention of the market.

It is just a year ago that the Central Realty, Bond and Trust Company bought the Donnelly tract at the southerly end of Washington Heights and started what was probably the greatest vacant property boom in the city's history by reselling the entire three blocks within a couple of days at a profit of $250,000. A year ago 700 lots in Manhattan and over 2,000 lots in the Bronx, including the Christopher Meyer, Faile, and Crane estate tracts, changed hands within a fortnight, but the entire attention of the real estate community was absorbed by this one topic of vacant property speculation.

Current business, on the other hand, while representing, in the number of transactions and in the total value of the properties involved, as large totals as that of the corresponding period last year, shows much more satisfactory features. With the exception of downtown business parcels there was hardly a single class of property or any type of transaction that did not make a substantial showing in last week's reports.

That part of Broadway between Fifty-ninth and Sixty-fifth Streets produced two noteworthy deals, involving corners at Sixty-second and Sixty-third Streets. The demands of the automobile trade for space in conspicuous locations are apparently insatiable, and have come opportunely, so far as these Broadway corners are concerned, in that they make it possible to derive good income from such sites until conditions warrant the erection of more costly buildings of some other type.

Of the many building operations projected north of 110th Street, the most important will be that growing out of the sale of the southwest corner of Broadway and 116th Street—the only corner at that junction not controlled by Columbia University and Barnard College, and, for that very reason, possessing peculiar advantages as an apartment house site. Washington Heights witnessed a fair amount of buying by builders, while in that part of Harlem north of 135th Street, between Lenox and Eighth Avenues, the market for new houses and for building sites has apparently lost little of its strength.

There has also been a marked revival of interest in the westerly part of the Bronx, as a result, no doubt, of the securing of the necessary consents from property owners for the building of a rapid transit line along Jerome Avenue. Operators have bought twenty-five lots on Plimpton Avenue, between 169th and 170th Streets, near the easterly end of Washington Bridge, and there were also reported a score or more of smaller transactions on Jerome Avenue itself and on Aqueduct, Walton, and Grand Avenues.

Levy, who will conduct a department store in the building. The operation affords a remarkable illustration of the advance in values in the neighborhood of the intersection of the Subway and elevated lines. By the terms of the lease Mr. Davies will receive a net income of 26 per cent. per annum on the price he paid for the property less than ten years ago.

The McVickar-Gaillard Realty Company has leased for the United States Realty and Improvement Company to the Homan & Schulz Company part of the four-story garage to be erected at the southwest corner of Broadway and Sixty-second Street. The lease is for a long term of years, at an aggregate rental of nearly $100,000.

Attractive Long Island Suburbs.

Among the many suburban colonies on Long Island which have come into being since that territory has been assured of adequate transportation facilities, none has attracted more general attention than Bayside Park, the property of the North Shore Realty Company, on Little Neck Bay.

All of the property at Bayside Park is carefully restricted, while its water front adds greatly to the number of its attractive features.

The Great Eastern Building Corporation of 299 Broadway has concluded the purchase of several parcels at Lynbrook, on the south shore of Long Island. One of these tracts will be opened to the public for sale next Saturday. About 3,000 acres of land near Lynbrook, sold recently, are said to have been bought by a syndicate in which Pennsylvania Railroad officials are interested.

The Auction Room.

Even aside from the great Aldrich estate offering, this week's schedule at auction is not wholly without important items.

Samuel Goldsticker will sell on Thursday the dwellings 142 East Sixty-fifth Street and 67 East Ninetieth Street, and at the stand of Phillips & Co. the factory property at 407 to 413 East Ninety-first Street will be offered in partition.

A Bronx sale covering 46 lots is also listed by Phillips & Co. for Thursday. The properties are situated on West Farms Road, Boone Avenue, Bryant, Longfellow, and 172d Street. That there is still a good demand for Bronx lots at auction was again apparent last week at the sale of vacant property near the 177th Street terminal of the Subway.

On Friday Bryan L. Kennelly will put up, in foreclosure, the property on the north side of Ninety-seventh Street, 162 feet east of Madison Avenue, 137.6 by 100.

On Tuesday, Oct. 31, L. J. Phillips & Co. will sell 184 lots, the remainder of the Varian estate property, at Williams Bridge, 181 lots of which were sold by the same firm on Oct. 3.

MORTGAGE FILINGS FOR WEEK.

There were recorded last week 381 mortgages, for $4,180,679; of which 201, for $2,042,368, were at 6 per cent.; 57, for $513,500, at 5½ per cent.; 68, for $1,143,043, at 5 per cent.; 13, for $151,500, at 4½ per cent., and 3, for $4,550, at 4 per cent. In the corresponding week last year there were recorded 432 mortgages, for $6,182,224; of which 188, for $1,785,431, were at 6 per cent.; 153, for $1,832,843, at 5 per cent.; 35, for $1,156,000, at 4½ per cent., and 11, for $242,900, at 4 per cent.

ALDRICH ESTATE AUCTION.

Much Interest Manifested in Coming Sale of Broadway Buildings.

The Aldrich estate auction sale, to be conducted at the Vesey Street Salesroom on Wednesday by Bryan L. Kennelly, is probably entitled to the distinction of being the largest offering of improved real estate ever held in this city, particularly since those in charge of the event say that there is an earnest desire on the part of the Aldrich executors to convert their holdings into cash. In the case of the Rhinelander, Bradish Johnson, and Kemp estate sales, all held within recent years, the aggregate of bids ran into the millions, but in each case the auction was simply part of a carefully prepared plan to put the estate's assets into the hands of a corporation without any real change in ownership.

It is estimated that the Aldrich properties will bring in the neighborhood of $5,000,000. These properties were accumulated by the late Herman Daggett Aldrich, who, as a member of the firm of McCurdy, Aldrich & Spence, made a large fortune in the wholesale dry goods trade. He died in 1880. His widow, Elizabeth W. Aldrich, died about a year ago, and it is in settlement of her estate that Wednesday's auction sale is to be held.

The most important of the properties to be disposed of are the Columbia Building at 29 Broadway, northwest corner of Morris Street, and Aldrich Court, a nine-story structure at 41 to 45 Broadway, running through to Trinity Place, and occupying a plot of over 15,000 square feet. The difficulty of finding buyers for properties of such high value as these has become almost a tradition of the auction room. Buyers for million-dollar parcels, however, are much more numerous than they were even five years ago, and it is freely predicted that these lower Broadway office buildings will not go begging for bids. Further up Broadway, buildings at 372, 600 and 602, and 681 will also be sold. On Murray and Warren Streets the estate has large holdings, and among the properties which will be offered are 23 to 27 Murray Street, running through to 27 to 31 Warren Street, 17 and 19 Murary Street, 82 and 84 Warren Street, and the building extending along the east side of Church Street, from Warren to Chambers Street. The wholesale dry goods district is represented in the list by 75 and 77 Leonard Street and 71 to 77 Worth Street. The only uptown properties are 48 East Eighty-third Street and a group of apartment houses at the northeast corner of Amsterdam Avenue and Seventy-fifth Street.

Several Brooklyn parcels are also included in the offering—a large plot at Seventh Avenue, Sixty-fourth and Sixty-fifth Streets, and buildings on Fulton and Herkimer Streets. Detailed descriptions of all of these properties will be found in the schedule of auction sales for this week, published in another column.

MILLIONS IN BROOKLYN DEAL.

Company Buys Vast Tracts in Southerly Parts of the Borough.

The McLaughlin Real Estate Company, of which Michael L. McLaughlin is President and Glenwood Hawkins Treasurer, announced yesterday the conclusion of negotiations for the purchase of nearly 10,000 lots in Brooklyn. The series of transactions involves in the neighborhood of $3,000,000, and the properties include many of the larger parcels of acreage now available for development in the southerly parts of the borough.

The largest of the purchases was that covering nearly 4,000 lots owned by M. L. Towns, and formerly known as the Kouwenhoven and Wyckoff farms. This property has frontages of nearly two miles on Ralph Avenue and over one mile on the Long Island Railroad, and extends from East Fifty-third Street to East Eighty-seventh Street and from Avenue C to Avenue J. It was bought by Mr. Towns and his associates about ten years ago.

The second largest of the purchases was that of the Tabscott farm, the two Schenck farms, and the Seiglock farm, comprising about 900 lots, and sold to the McLaughlin Company by Gilbert Elliott. This tract has a frontage of about 2,000 feet on Remsen Avenue, close to the Eastern Parkway, and is intersected by King's Highway.

The following farms which have also been acquired practically adjoin one another: The Dryer farm of 600 lots, the Lahey farm of 450 lots, the Stillwell farm of 500 lots, the Ryder farm of 600 lots, and the Lott and Clapp farms of 600 lots. These properties together make 2,750 lots, situated between Flatbush Avenue, Nostrand Avenue, Avenue U, and Avenue Q.

Another purchase was that of the Gaynor farm of 600 lots, known on the city maps for over a hundred years as the Farrell tract, but which was purchased four or five years ago by Justice Gaynor and a Mr. Peak. This tract of land runs on the north nearly to Avenue K, on the south to Avenue M, on the east to East Fifty-first Street, and on the west to King's Highway.

Probably the most important of the purchases just closed was that of the large tract recently owned by the Brighton Beach Racing Association, on Coney Island Avenue, Ocean Parkway, Neck Road, and Neptune Avenue. This tract comprises 1,000 lots and has a frontage on Coney Island Avenue of nearly a mile. A number of the minor transactions cover about 400 lots, including the Story farm, at Gravesend and Church Avenues, near Prospect Park; the Coleman tract, at Avenue N and Flatbush Avenue, and the Wanke property, at Gravesend Avenue and Avenue U, and about 100 lots in Bensonhurst.

All of these properties are directly in the line of Brooklyn's growth, and the development of several of them will be undertaken in the near future by their new owners.

BETTER OUTLOOK FOR ELM STREET PROPERTIES.

Operators Now Paying Some Attention to the Thoroughfare—Belief That It Will Recover Even After Ten Years' Neglect.

The building to be erected at 66 to 72 Elm Street, now Lafayette Street officially, is the first important piece of new construction on that thoroughfare since its restoration, following about ten years of upheaval.

The site for this new structure has been cleared, and those behind the project say that there has already been a sufficient amount of inquiry for space in the building to convince them that it will be wholly successful from a financial point of view.

Elm Street is just beginning to have a chance, and the events of the next three or four years ought to settle pretty conclusively whether it is going to "make good"—whether the widening of it was to a large extent a waste of money or whether it is going to become an important business artery, with much new construction and advancing land values.

Owners along Elm Street are naturally in a more satisfied mood than at any time during the last decade, and the reason for this a single glance would explain to anybody familiar with the Elm Street of old. An owner can now get to his property without difficulty and can cross the street without the aid of a field map. Holders of Elm Street property are again beginning to consider its possibilities. Until very recently no thoughts of sales or building operations on Elm Street could be indulged in, because an owner could have no assurance as to how much property he would own next week or next month. The northeast corner of Elm and Worth Streets, upon which a new building was completed only a few months ago, may be taken as a typical instance. This plot originally measured about 54 by 87, the longer dimension on Worth Street. First, the widening of Elm Street took away the front 36 feet of the plot. Later, the building of the Subway made it necessary to slice off another 13 feet, so that there remains only 54 by 39.8, or less than half of the original plot.

As one real estate operator put it: "They did everything they could think of to Elm Street, and when nothing else remained, they changed its name."

The widening of Elm Street was undertaken primarily to afford relief to that part of Broadway adjacent to it. The question has arisen whether conditions have not changed in some measure within the last ten years with regard to those problems which led up to this bit of street improvement. Broadway has not decreased noticeably in activity, but the manufacturers and wholesalers, who ten years ago were very largely confined to the territory south of Fourteenth Street, have now invaded the territory north of that thoroughfare, and the increase in their lines of business has been reflected almost wholly in the more northerly neighborhood. In other words, has not the increase which was intended for Elm Street already begun on a large scale to find accommodations elsewhere?

Samuel H. Stone, who has given considerable attention to this and similar matters involving Elm Street, answers the question in the negative. Mr. Stone admits the spread northward of what used to be known as the Broadway mercantile district, but says that the migration has affected for the most part only those lines of business which can derive advantage from being close to the great retail stores, and that there is still a sufficient demand among other lines, for which a downtown location is essential, to take care of Elm Street's future. Elm Street to-day provides a fine, broad thoroughfare, free from car tracks or any other sort of obstruction—a condition which, it is believed, will make it popular with wholesalers, particularly in view of the difference in rents there and on Broadway, only a block away.

Brokers and operators are as a rule unwilling to give even the most general sort of an opinion as to Elm Street values. Few transactions of recent years have afforded any satisfactory line on prices, and furthermore the street-widening process left many irregular and peculiarly shaped parcels of the kind that tax the ingenuity of appraisers.

The plot at 66 to 72 Elm Street, already mentioned, was owned until recently by the city. It was offered at auction last Spring, and was sold for $90,500. A five-story building at the northeast corner of Elm and Howard Streets, on lot 27 by 112, brought $70,000 under foreclosure a few months ago. The northwest corner of Elm and White Streets, 44 by 82.5, was last transferred about five years ago, the consideration being $55,900.

"Elm Street lots?" repeated the speculator. "Well, in my opinion they're worth from $35,000 to $60,000 each, according to location. That could hardly be called an exact figure, I know, but I think you'll find it about as close as anybody can come."

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

GREER & HUTTON.—Greer & Hutton, formerly dry goods commission merchants of 71 Franklin Street, have filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $7,593 and nominal assets of $8,906, consisting of mortgage of $1,900 on the property of the Standard Hicks Hammock Company of Mount Holly, N. J.; notes of that company, $5,900; other notes, $500, and accounts, $606. The liabilities are all on account of the Standard Hicks Hammock Company, $5,093, being on accommodation paper and $2,500 on an agreement to purchase goods of the company, but the goods were never delivered. The Mount Holly National Bank is a creditor for $4,093.

SALY MARANTZ.—Schedules in bankruptcy of Saly Marantz, dealer in embroideries and laces at 42 Canal Street, show liabilities of $17,475 and assets of $2,100, consisting of stock, $1,500; safe and office furniture, $200, and accounts, $400. Among the creditors are Klauber, Horn & Co., $6,500; Fenkart & Co., $5,500; Einstein, Wolff & Co., $1,200; Field, Chapman & Co., $1,200, and I. M. Nordlinger, $1,200.

WANTS MONEY FOR STOCKS.

Customer Gets Attachment Against Curtis & Sederquist.

Deputy Sheriff Leavitt has received an attachment for $7,633 against Curtis & Sederquist, stock brokers of Boston, who have branches at 52 Broadway, this city, and Portland, Me., in favor of Charles W. Foster, formerly of Portland.

He alleged that on Jan. 21 and 23 he deposited $600 with them, and Feb. 3 gave them 300 shares of United States Mining Company stock to sell for him; that they sold the stock on the same day for $7,033; that he has demanded the money, but they refused to pay it to him.

It is said that the firm claims that the money was lost in subsequent speculations. The Sheriff served the attachment on two banks here.

INFORMATION FOR THE REAL ESTATE MAN with property to sell or with houses or apartments to rent.

THE NEW YORK TIMES reaches the man or woman with money—more so than any other newspaper.

THE NEW YORK TIMES reaches the Real Estate man. It prints more Real Estate news than any other newspaper.

Here are some significant expressions:

JOHN R. and OSCAR L. FOLEY, 149 Broadway: "We sold five pieces of property through advertising in THE NEW YORK TIMES for an aggregate over $180,000. We have now more than 150 buyers for New York City real estate, all of which came to us through reading our advertisement in THE NEW YORK TIMES."

COLUMBIA INVESTMENT AND REAL ESTATE CO., Times Building, Times Square: "The returns we have received from THE NEW YORK TIMES have so far exceeded those from any other newspaper. The fact that we have and continue to do so proves the opinion we have of it as an advertising medium."

BANKERS' LAND AND MORTGAGE CORPORATION, 150 Nassau St.: "We attribute our phenomenal sales of over a quarter of a million dollars not only to the merits of East Elmhurst, but also to the efficacy of printers' ink, and THE NEW YORK TIMES readers have purchased in numbers so gratifying as to confirm our faith in your paper as a most excellent medium for the sales of real estate."

SCHWAB REALTY CO., 200 Broadway: "Through an advertisement recently placed in THE NEW YORK TIMES to be inserted for seven times we sold the two three-story and basement residences known as 364-368 West 118th St."

FOLSOM BROTHERS, 835 Broadway: "From a 20-cent advertisement in a Sunday issue of THE NEW YORK TIMES we effected a sale Monday morning netting us a profit sufficient to pay for half a year's advertising."

W. & J. GOLDBERG, 116 Nassau St.: "During one month's advertising in THE NEW YORK TIMES our business on sales amounted to over a quarter of a million of dollars and mortgages aggregating $190,000. We can with reason say THE NEW YORK TIMES is indispensable to us."

C. A. WEBER, 633 East 149th St.: "I have sold directly through my advertising in THE NEW YORK TIMES Real Estate columns several large Bronx plots and a number of Harlem flat houses."

SONNEBORN & CO., Bedford Park, N. Y.: "Through an advertisement in THE NEW YORK TIMES we sold the house on Decatur Av. and 200th St."

GRASPING THE OPPORTUNITY

What Has Made Men Rich

Trace down the pages of the biographical history of the wealthy men of our country and you will find at least 75 per cent. of them who began life as a poor boy, but industry, economy and energy have made their names household ones in the business and professional world. You will say that luck makes men wealthy. It is not so; though there are cases—a small percentage—where a windfall dropped into the lap of some man by his predecessor or his relationship or in the game of chance. But where there is one thus fortunate there are ten others who started on life's highway with strong arm and a clear mind, without friends, without money and without influence, to battle against the whole world and mould for themselves by energy and endurance a fortune honorably made.

My dear wage-earner, if you desire the proof and convincing evidence of the headline of this advertisement, how men became wealthy, go out and ask the first successful man you know what made him rich—how did he start on nothing and become wealthy. He will repeat what we have said: GRASPING THE OPPORTUNITY.

The poor man, or the young man to-day without means, has greater chances and finer opportunities of getting rich than the boy or man twenty years ago.

A New York paper in its editorial stated on the 30th of September the following:

"A man with a small accumulation of money to-day can make himself rich in ten years IF HE WILL BUY LAND WISELY. One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street is nearer the City Hall to-day than was Fourteenth Street a few years ago.

"In ten years from now to-day's low priced lots will be nearer the City Hall than One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street is to-day.

"If you have some money, and can pay a little more each year, GO INTO REAL ESTATE. This is the time. This is the very beginning of the new and extraordinary transportation movement."

It took New York 100 years before it became a city of 150,000 people, and now it takes 12 months to add this population to its greatness.

To-day there are within the territorial limits of Greater New York 4,240,622 people, an increase of nearly 750,000 in five years—an increase greater than the whole city of Boston, with population of 650,000, in present statistics 1905. Just think for a moment what this means. 750,000 people to feed, clothe and house somewhere in New York or in its suburbs; 150,000 apartments or houses required to cover the people's heads; and if each family should own one lot 25x100, it would mean that 15,000 acres of land at least has been developed to accommodate this great community of people.

The per cent. of increase of population is greater each year. Now the question arises,

What Will We Do with the 1,000,000 Increased Population in the Next 5 Years? Where Will They Go? Where Will They Live? Ask Yourself That Question.

DAME FORTUNE KNOCKS AT YOUR DOOR AND SHOUTS "INVEST NOW IN THE SUBURBS! GRASP THE OPPORTUNITY!"

Every one of the 3,000,000 rent-payers who is a wage-earner can go back five years and face the proposed development of the city of New York and its suburbs. It was all on paper, it was found only in the columns of the daily press; but to-day you can look back and find that $500,000,000 has been spent—New York Subway, Williamsburg Bridge, Blackwell's Island Bridge, Brooklyn Subway, East River tunnel, Pennsylvania Railway tunnel, Belmont tunnel, North River tunnel, 100 hotels, 100 office buildings, 500 apartment houses, 50 theatrical houses, electricity on Elevated instead of steam.

Land Has Increased in Price Since 1900 in Westchester 500 Per Cent. Land Has Increased in Kings Since 1900 300 Per Cent. Land Has Increased in Queens Since 1900 500 Per Cent. Let Us Picture Now for You the Next Five Years and the Locality Where You Can Get Rich If You Will Grasp This Opportunity.

The great activity for investment and for homes will in the next five years be just outside of Greater New York on Long Island—just where the wage-earner can reach inside of 30 minutes for a 5 or 10 cent fare; where the line of travel by steam or electricity will be frequent day and night.

The Star of Prosperity Is Now Rising In the East, Coming Over the Fertile Fields of Long Island, and Within a Few Days It Will Reveal a Tale of Prophecy and Make Known the Future Outside of Greater New York.
